—The city pay roll has taken many bags of silver dollars from the banks this week, and an express wagon is necessary to go about with the disbursing officer. Still no one objects to receiving silver dollars, and the only trouble is in not getting enough of them.

—Miss Maggie Mullen of Adams street has returned from her position in Boston, stenographer and typewriter, and is going to enter a private shorthand school in Boston, in order to become more proficient in her profession, so as to take a place as court stenographer.

—Thos. J. Mullen, a very bright and much respected young man of Cambridge who met with a serious accident July 8th, on the B. & A. R. at Newton, underwent the second operation on his foot last Saturday, his left foot above the ankle being amputated. His many friends from schoolmates send him and his parents their heartfelt sympathy.

—The people of Newton have the greatest faith in the Newton Savings bank, and the trustees have no occasion for putting up the 30 days' notice. There have been no withdrawals of money save in a few cases where depositors have found desirable investments which promise large returns, and they do say that many of the deposits are picked up in the bank and put back into circulation. The bank kept, provided the buyer knows just what to get. The Newton bank is regarded as almost as solid as the city itself, as it has always been very conservatively managed.

—The residents of Watertown are rejoicing over the prospect of an electric street railway line through Cambridge to Boston, now that the Battle street location has been secured. The West End line is partially equipped for electric service from Nonantum square, Newton, through Centre and Salem streets to Boston, and from Watertown to Mt. Auburn. The tracks are wired, but the poles have not yet been placed in position. It is expected that the electric cars will be run over the entire route from Newton to Boston before the advent of another summer.

—The Newton & Boston Street Railway Company was before the railroad commissioners again Monday morning on its petition for an approval of the proposed issue of $100,000 contemplated in the act of June 6, '93. President Parker and Treasurer Richards of the road testified to the details of its business. It appears that the work of extension, construction and purchase, for which the company says it has no funds, increase of stock, was largely accomplished during the time of the introduction of the act and its becoming a law. This completed work created a debt, but the act authorized the issue of stock to pay the indebtedness, but only for work to be done in the future. This point was raised by the chairman of the board, and the matter was again postponed for the consideration of this and certain minor points affecting the amount of stock that may be issued.

Reunion of 32d Mass.
The 32d Mass. Regiment have arranged for their annual reunion which will this year take the form of an excursion to Plymouth on Saturday, Aug. 12. A special train has been provided which will leave the Kneeland street station of the Old colony railroad at 9.30 a. m. returning in the afternoon at about 4 o'clock. Headquarters will be established at G. A. R. Hall on arrival at Plymouth and as one desires, they can have a basket lunch at the hall or enjoy a clam bake. Pilgrim Hall will be free to members and their friends through an invitation extended by the society, and the day may be pleasantly spent in visiting the many historic places in this grand old town. Members will take their ladies and a cordial invitation is extended to all friends of the regiment.
Co. K. of the 32d Massachusetts went out from Newton and most of the surviving members, less than a dozen in number now, will be in attendance. The fare for the round trip is $1.00.

The second deal that has been attempted this year in the city council, came to grief Monday night. It is much better to let the merits of a question decide in every case.

World's Fair.
I have a fine new modern stone and brick private residence of 14 rooms, in a

HOVEY AND HOBART.
WON CHAMPIONSHIP OF UNITED STATES IN DOUBLES.

Fred H. Hovey and Clarence Hobart won the championship of the United States in doubles at the national lawn tennis association's tournament Saturday by defeating O. S. Campbell and R.
P. Huntington, Jr., the champions of 1891 and 1892, by a score of 6-3, 6-4, 4-6, 6-2.

Over 1200 people witnessed the contest, which at times was brilliant. Hobart and Hovey won the toss and elected to serve, but Campbell and Huntington won the first point by a pretty return.
Hobart equalized matters, and then Hobart and Hovey, by strong play, landed the first game. The second game was hardly fought. Campbell and Huntington started out in the lead, but Hovey played brilliantly, his returns being swift and his playing judicious. The game went to Hovey and Hobart. The third, fourth and fifth fell to the rising stars and it looked as if the champions were not going to be factors in the match. The ninth game, however, they won, while their opponents had only scored one point. The seventh game was a hard one. Hobart and Hovey started out at a great pace, and it was 40 to 15, Hovey having got in some of his clever returns. The champions went to work and secured the game, after deuce had been called three times.

The score now stood 5-2, and when the champions won the next game, making it 5-3, their friends plucked up courage. The next game, however, settled the set, as Hobart and Hovey did good work, winning to their opponents 30 and the set by a score of 6-3.

In the second set Campbell and Huntington took the initial game and Hobart and Hovey failed to score. The second game was almost a reverse, as the champions only reached 15, and the score was one all. Hobart and Hovey won the third only after deuce had been called twice.

After eight games it was four all.
Campbell made some irresistible returns in the ninth and captured the game, making the score 5-4. The tenth game and set also fell to the champions.

In the fourth and last set Campbell and Huntington played a plucky game, but luck was against them. In the last game of the set Hobart and Hovey by hard play scored two points. Then the champions got two points, and the score was 30 all. Once more Hovey and Hobart got away; 40-30. With a great stroke Campbell made the game deuce.

Not until deuce had been called eight times did a swift smash from Hovey settle the business and proclaim him and his partner the champions of the United States.

The Casino cup, which would have become the property of Campbell and Huntington had they won this year, will remain open for competition. The new champions received a loving cup each from the Chicago committee.

Golden Wedding.
Mr. and Mrs. Horace Bacon of Boylston street celebrated the fiftieth anniversary of their wedding yesterday at their residence. The hours of the reception were from 3 until 5 and from 7 to 9 o'clock.

The house was beautified by decorations of potted ferns and plants and flowers, many of the latter being brought by the guests until every available place seemed filled with their beauty and fragrance.

Mr. and Mrs. Bacon received in a front room, the background being a mass of potted plants and smilax in which the dates "1843" and "1893" in golden letters were placed. They were assisted by their eldest granddaughter, Miss Mattie Randall, who wore her grandmother's wedding dress and jewels of fifty years ago.

In the evening the grounds about the house were illuminated by Japanese lanterns. There were many and valuable presents.

There were about 250 present during the afternoon and evening, and among those present were friends and relatives

ORIGINAL POEM
READ AT THE GOLDEN WEDDING OF MR.
AND MRS. HORACE BACON.

The return of one's natal day,
Like mine, is a golden anniversary,
Shows the traveler marching on,
That one more precious year hath gone;
And as he nears his journey's end,
His mind to sober thoughts will bend.

But in life's early growing years,
These moments scarce to spare,
And when a score of years have flown,
As in our social life 'tis known,
The sexes mate, a sacred love,
And sanctioned

CITY GOVERNMENT.

ORDERS PRESENTED FOR $200,000 IN BONDS—DR. DAVID E. BAKER RESIGNS.

A special meeting of the board of aldermen was called last Monday evening.

The mayor presided and all the members were present. The records were read and approved.

DR. BAKER RESIGNS.

A communication was read by the mayor, containing the resignation from the board of health of Dr. David E. Baker. His appreciation of an appointment to the new board was expressed, but the demands of his patients were such as to prevent his giving the attention required as a member of the board.

The mayor appointed Francis George Curtis, M. D., to be a member of the new board of health.

The members of the fire department were reappointed by the mayor.

Sarah C. Boyle gave notice of intention to build a block of stores on Water-town street 41x50 feet. Granted.

Notice was given of intention to build dwelling house 26x38 and 8x15 feet on Rockland street.

Alderman Emerson presented a petition from Lewis E. Coffin asking that Lewis terrace be laid out, graded and accepted as a public highway, also petition for sidewalks on Lewis terrace. Referred.

HYDE STREET EXTENSION.

Alderman Bothfield presented an order accepting the offer of $200 from Joseph R. Smith for the extension of Hyde street. The order was adopted.

An order was passed authorizing the construction of concrete cross-walks on Crescent avenue, Oak and Chestnut streets, also an order to construct concrete sidewalk on Central place.

TO FLOAT BONDS OF $200,000.

Alderman Bothfield presented orders authorizing the city treasurer to sell and dispose of 100 bonds of the denomination of $1000 each of the Newton Boulevard loan, in two blocks of fifty each, bearing interest from Sept. 1, 1893, at 4 per cent annually, payable Sept. 1, 1893. Adopted.

Alderman Thompson, chairman of the public property committee, presented an order authorizing the construction of an eight room brick schoolhouse on Lincoln street, Ward Five, at an expense not to exceed $50,000 and authorizing the city treasurer to issue $1000 bonds to be denominated Newton Highlands school house loan, bearing interest at 4 per cent, payable in 1893.

Alderman Roffe was not in any way opposed to a new school house at the Highlands for it was very much needed. But he thought there was no necessity of its costing $50,000.

Alderman Thompson said the committee had been over the various plans submitted, very carefully, and had decided upon that proposed as the best and most economical that could be secured.

Alderman Bothfield said there was no question regarding the need of a new school house, but he thought $50,000 was excessive. He judged so from the Clifton school and the one at West Newton. The former cost about $37,000. These were only six room school houses, but he did not think two rooms additional should increase the cost $13,000. He suggested $42,000 as a fair proportionate estimate.

Alderman Hunt said the new ordinances required the construction of brick partition walls, which increased the cost of construction about 20 per cent. The building could not be constructed for a much less figure.

Alderman Thompson said he believed it wise to increase the tax levy, but he thought when it was considered that the Highlands was growing very fast, they should have the best possible for a school building, and that the city should give them what they wanted in this respect.

Alderman Thompson thought the judgment of the alderman from Ward Three was worth careful consideration.

Alderman Hunt said the actual increase in the cost of a brick building today over five years ago is about 15 per cent.

The order was then submitted to vote and was unanimously adopted.

Alderman Emerson presented an order which was adopted authorizing the city treasurer to issue blank certificates of $1,000 each, in total amount not to exceed $50,000, bearing interest at four per cent, and denominated Newton Water loan. Adopted.

Orders were then passed authorizing the city treasurer to sell and dispose in blocks of twenty-five, of fifty bonds of $1000 each, bearing interest from Aug. 1, 1893.

A paper was received from the common council for concurrent action on the petition of G. L. Estabrook for sewer in Thornton street. Referred in concurrence.

The board then adjourned.

Common Council.

The common council met Monday evening in regular session with President Weed in the chair, and all members present except Councilman Howes and Turner.

Some excitement was looked for in this body as vigorous opposition to the passage of the Newton boulevard order was expected, and quite a number of gentlemen interested in the matter were present. All the papers from the aldermen were present in conference until the order authorizing the construction of the Newton boulevard was reached and then it was quietly

TABLED.

The orders authorizing the city treasurer to sell and dispose of bonds for the same, was also related to the table on motion of Councilman Parker.

The order authorizing the construction of an eight room school house at Newton Highlands and the sale of bonds not exceeding $50,000 in amount, for its erection, came down for concurrence.

Councilman Dezen moved to table, his motion was seconded by Councilman Ross, and it was tabled.

Then to give everyone sufficient rest before tackling these orders for $150,000 in bonds, an adjournment was taken to September 11, 1893.

Looks Like a Hussar.

The Evening Record printed a very handsome picture of Lieut. H. B. Parker, of the first regiment, also president of numerous Newton street railway companies, the other evening. The Record gives the following in regard to Mr. Parker, which will interest his many Newton friends:

Six feet high, with shoulders so broad that they would test many a door in entering them, H. B. Parker, the first lieutenant and paymaster in the First regiment, who is among the leaders now in the contest for The Record's sword, looks for all the world like a German hussar rather than a Yankee militia officer.

Lieut. Parker has the bearing of a soldier in every way, and he has spent almost 20 years in the service. It was in June, '75, when he first put on the State's colors in Co. A in the Sixth regiment. He served for two years and was discharged, entering the Tigers in the same year.

He remained with the Tigers till he had filled all the positions from private to first sergeant; then he resigned and was made color sergeant of the Fourth Battalion. In time he was made color sergeant of the First regiment, and while in that position visited Philadelphia with that organization. When the regiment returned from Gen. Grant's funeral he was appointed first lieutenant and paymaster by Col. Wellington.

Personally Lieut. Parker is one of the most genial as well as commanding officers in the service. He is essentially the young soldiers' man and his efforts have all been directed towards getting the young men into his service.

He was born in Roxbury and has been in the shoe business all his life, and is known all over the country.

The First regiment is bound to rally for him. Already the votes are piling in a manner that shows how well he is appreciated by all from private to staff officer.

CRICKET.

EAST BOSTON '93, NEWTON '97.

A good game was played at Newton Saturday between the home team and East Boston, the latter winning, 93-67. For the winners, Willie Robinson did some of his old-time batting for 35, and Davidson and Dyson let the batting for Newton. Broxup made a good bowling record by taking three wickets by consecutive balls and securing four for four runs. The score:

One Way to Study Shakespeare.

In order to understand the hidden truths of Shakespeare, it is necessary to make a study of his plays. His one purpose will soon be revealed to you, to present life as it is, not as one's ideal. When the purpose is revealed, study how it is done. The fact is given you, try to find how it is given you.

A good way to do is to select two plays of opposite character, for instance, "Hamlet" and "Julius Caesar." Contrast the good and bad characters in one play with the corresponding ones in the other tragedy. Compare them to somebody with whom you are intimate.

Notice the like points, distinguish the unlike ones. Try to improve your character by assuming the noble qualities and discarding the mean and immoral ones. Read over aloud a difficult passage until it becomes clearer and try to give an illustration from something or somebody about you. Soon you will find that the concealed truths do not seem so complex as when you began, and you can understand the meaning in shorter time. You will find that you have a clearer insight into character about you.

In this way, you will educate yourself and will cultivate a taste for the purest of literature. You can help your fellow men by trying to implant in them a desire for pure and helpful reading.

Metropolitan Districts.

(Somerville News.)

It is reported that many of the prominent citizens of Newton want to put its police force, with the like departments of other cities and towns of the metropolitan district, under a metropolitan commission. Then the police of any city or town could make arrests in any other city or town in the district. The members of the various departments would be under the complete control of the commission, and responsible to it alone, which would result in harmony of action, freedom from partisan influence, the incentive to better work given by greater chance of promotion, and the enrollment of a more intelligent and independent class of patrolmen throughout the suburbs.

This is another straw showing which way the wind is blowing. It is toward recognition of the fact that all the people within ten miles of the State House form a community with identical interests, and should be governed with harmony of system and unity of action.

The suburbs have ceased to be rural villages, independent and self-contained. They have become virtually residence wards of a metropolis, in the business of which, work nine-tenths of their citizens.

The same conditions have confronted London, New York, Chicago, and other large communities, and have been met by extending the borders of the central municipality, or by creating Governmental districts. We are working toward a solution of the problem, but not fast enough.

BOSTON AMUSEMENTS.

BOWDOIN SQUARE THEATRE.—The Bowdoin Square Theatre opens its doors for the new season, Saturday night with a grand production of the realistic drama, "The Still Alarm." A particularly strong company has been assembled and the famous Arabian steeds will again take part in the engine house scene. The box office is now open for the sale of seats. "The Still Alarm" holds the stage at the Bowdoin Square all next week.

PARK THEATRE.—Favored by a popularity which takes no note of passing weeks, "The Golden Wedding" was played and sung Monday night at the Park. Mr. George Fortescue continues his role as the tragedy queen; the Daly sisters are as agile as ever in their demon dances; Miss Lucy Daley as Foxey, the household girl, is still equal to all emergencies. A new comer is Mr. Thomas LeMack, who Monday night joined the company as O'Fly, the general utility man of the Blythe establishment.

Changes in stage business and in the dialogue and songs, as well as in the various incidental specialties, are a marked feature of "The Golden Wedding," and this perhaps is the chief explanation of the fact that many people have witnessed the play again and again since its opening night two or three months ago. The run of "The Golden Wedding" is in the height of its popularity. The Park has been found cool and comfortable, the play and players of a fascinating character, and the result has been big houses. It must be confessed that the stronger part of the attraction lies in the people upon the stage. On the whole they are a merry, lively lot, and never seem to lose a catchy hit for an instant.

There are no dreary periods in "The Golden Wedding." Everything is snappy from the rising of the curtain until its final fall. The management is already agitating its mind concerning the character of souvenirs for the 100th performance. The 11th week begins Monday next.

Dernier Resort.

(From the Detroit Tribune)

Great pearls were tribune from her blue eyes, and rolled down her damask cheeks.

With trembling lips she listened to the critical words of the man with side whiskers and goatee.

"Yes," he was saying, in a harsh, board-of-trade voice, "you don't seem to improve any in spelling!"

The girl shuddered.

"And you leave out whole words, to say nothing!"

She shrank away with a look of despair upon her face.

"Of the fact that you understand everything wrong."

"Then I am not a success as a typewriter!" she asked, tremulously.

He nodded.

"Perhaps!"

She faltered, and her glance sought the ground.

"I might be induced to reconsider my refusal of the matrimonial proposition you made me."

The affair was compromised on these lines.

A Complication.

(From the Washington Star.)

It was at a summer resort where the proverbial scarcity of men prevailed.

"You know Willie Broadbrim," said a girl who breathlessly joined the group.

"Yes."

"He's going to be married next week."

"Married!" said a third with a gasp.

"Are you sure?"

"Yes."

"Isn't he inconsiderate!" said another girl who had pretty near fallen out of the hammock.

"Perfectly horrid," replied the first speaker. "Now we girls will all have to break our engagements."

And then resolutions were passed to the effect that Willie Broadbrim was a mean thing.

SCROFULAR OR KING'S EVIL DESTROYED.

RODOLF MEDICINE CO.

GENTLEMEN:—Some three years ago a small scrofula bunch appeared under my right ear which grew very rapidly until last April it was as large around as a goose egg, extending down my neck six inches, and so large that it forced my head around to the left, with my chin extended. I am fifteen years of age and it mortified me very much, for every one noticed it and I could not enjoy going into company. I tried all kinds of medicine without receiving any benefit.

I consulted a physician last April who recommended Rodolf's New Medical Discovery, to be taken with Rodolf's Cream Emulsion. I commenced their use at once, and at the end of the first month could see that the bunch was a little smaller. My mother measured my neck every week and found after the first month that it grew smaller very fast; some weeks my neck would be half an inch smaller in circumference than the week before. I continued the use of the medicine until about a month ago when, the bunch having been gone some time, I considered the humor thoroughly removed from my blood. My health is extra good, and I feel very happy and grateful for the benefit I have received from Rodolf's New Medical Discovery. I will gladly answer any questions or letters which any one suffering as I was may be pleased to ask, or write if they will enclose a stamp.

THE OHIO CHEMICAL CO.:—DEAR SIR:—I have been using your cure for tobacco habit, and found it would do what you claim for it. I used ten cents worth of the strongest chewing tobacco a day, and from one to five cigars; or I would smoke from ten to forty pipes of tobacco. Have chewed and smoked for twenty five years, and two packages of your Tablets cured me so I have no desire for it. B. M. JAYLOR, Leslie, Mich.

THE OHIO CHEMICAL CO.:—GENTLEMEN:—Some time ago I sent for a package of your Tablets for Tobacco Habit. I received them all right, and although I was both a heavy smoker and chewer, they did the work in less than three days. I am cured. Truly yours, MATHEW JOHNSON, P. O. Box 45.

THE OHIO CHEMICAL CO.:—GENTLEMEN:—It gives me pleasure to speak a word of praise for your Tablets. My son was strongly addicted to the use of liquor, and through a friend, I was led to try your Tablets. He was a heavy and constant drinker, but after using your Tablets but three days he quit drinking, and will not touch liquor of any kind. I have waited four months before writing you, in order to know the cure was permanent. Yours truly, MRS. HELEN MORRISON.

THE BOULEVARD ENDORSED.

The action of the City Council in endorsing the recommendation of the boulevard commission, and committing the city government to the construction of a boulevard through the heart of the city, is one that will give great satisfaction in years to come. It is a stupendous enterprise and it is marvellous that it can be put through at so little expense. It is sure to bring in returns that will be many fold greater than the cost, and the scheme has been so thoroughly considered from every point of view, that all possible objections have been presented and answered. It is as true of cities as of men, that there is a certain tide of affairs that taken at the flood lead on to fortune, and it would be worse than foolish for Newton to refuse to avail itself of this very advantageous opportunity.

Of course there have been opponents, every public undertaking meets with opposition in some shape, but it is remarkable that in this case the opposition has been of so little weight. It has been opposed by some, because they wanted the boulevard to go through their own land in another direction, others, but these were very few, objected to some of the lines adopted while they favored the scheme in itself, and there have been the usual number of timid souls, who shrink from any kind of an enterprise which is to cost anything, and to whom any outlay where at least ten per cent is not guaranteed, brings a succession of night-mares. But such objectors have been unusually few and the opponents of the enterprise have had to take the city over carefully to find them.

There has been of course the usual empty chatter about the boulevard being a real estate speculation, from those who had not sense enough to see that what ever benefit the owners of land might get out of it, would also be to the benefit of the city in double measure, to say the least. If the shrewd business men, who are interested, think they can get back the price of the land they give the city, and also the third of the cost of building the boulevard, which they are to contribute, the city can surely get a good interest on its outlay by the rise in the value of the land, and the additions to the tax list from the improvements along the route. The foolish talk of such men is not worthy of consideration.

The only objection to immediate action in the matter is the doubt in regard to the ability to place the necessary bonds while the present scare over money matters prevails, and for that reason the city council is perhaps wise to wait a little while, until the scare blows over, when the bonds can be placed to better advantage. The city will doubtless soon be in a position to take hold of the enterprise with the enthusiasm that it deserves, and certainly no question has ever been before the city government, which promised greater returns from the money expended, than this new boulevard.

The council has passed the order for seizing the land from the Boston line to Centre street, which may be done any time within two years, as the time limit has been extended. A similar order will be passed in regard to the part from Centre street to Auburn street, in the near future. The city can then go to work and build the boulevard any time within the next twenty years, so there need be no fears of any rash running into debt, although it is to be hoped that the work will not be long delayed.

THE FINANCIAL SCARE.

A financial panic is a curious thing, and the one that exists at present has even more than the usual interesting features, which are worthy of attention. Business is always dull in midsummer and manufacturers shut down their mills for a more or less time without attracting much attention from the public. But this year every such shut down is widely advertised, from the mill that employs a thousand hands, to the one that employs a dozen, and every failure of a speculator doing business on an imaginary capital, or a business man firm in like condition, is made the most of. It is the American way, some writer says, and that we are never satisfied without trying to have every event the biggest kind of a crisis.

Of course there is some excuse for the present depression, but good judges of the present condition of affairs say that there is no excuse for any fears of a panic. The crops this year are unusually good, the harvests will be abundant, and people seem to have the usual amount of money for necessities and luxuries. In Newton the great number of new buildings now going up, and the general exodus of citizens to the summer resorts, do not give evidence of very serious lack of money. People may be scared by all this sensational talk into holding on the money they would otherwise use in paying their bills, but money for pleasures of every kind seems to be abundant enough, and what is true of Newton is probably true of other places.

Some newspapers and some politicians are displaying their idea of patriotism by trying to scare the country into a panic, for the capital their party may make out of it, and some manufacturers who have made enormous profits the past few years are trying to help them along, so that their future profits may not be interfered with, but such a conspiracy against the public good is unworthy of any one who claims to be a man and ought not to and will not succeed. With the opening of the fall season there is no reason why business should not be good again, in all lines where the market has not been overstocked, and if Congress does its duty, the monetary question will be settled in a satisfactory way, and business freed from that danger.

DOG DAY DISCORDS.

A citizen who has attended several of the recent meetings of the board of aldermen, wants to know who is the Mayor of Newton. Our correspondent seems to have somehow gained the impression that the city clerk endeavors to direct legislation, advance such as he wishes advanced and delay what he opposes. This is a strange idea for a spectator to get hold of, as of course it must be a mistaken one. The duties of a city clerk are simply clerical, and of course no holder of such a position would step outside of such duties, unless possibly he thought he knew more than all the aldermen and the mayor put together. There is a good deal of talk about the city concerning the way the boulevard legislation has been opposed in all sorts of ways, members of the lower branch have been labored with to vote against it, and newspapers have been furnished with arguments casting discredit upon the whole thing, and if the talk has any foundation, we do not blame the majority of the council for feeling that such acts are not what ought to be expected from a city employee. There is said to be a good deal of feeling over the matter, and the outcome will be looked for with interest. Apparently all this opposition has not so far proved very formidable, as it is reported that only one councilman has been induced to change his vote and the necessary orders have been passed before adjournment. Of course, such acts are very childish, and perhaps that is the reason they have not been more severely censured. Mayor Fenno is courteous and gentlemanly by nature, but it is not safe to presume upon his forbearance, as some have found to their cost. We are sorry to hear such reports of friction at City Hall and hope that the August vacation will induce a return of the outward urbanity and suavity that have so graced one of its important offices. We would not mention such an instance as sending an order for printing to one firm after a committee had voted to give it to another, as that might serve to confirm some of these rumors, and we don't like to stir up discord in the dog days.

The author of a recent novel drew a picture of a wealthy mill-owner, who when hard times came, said that as he had made his money by the help of his operatives, he felt he had a duty to perform towards them, and as long as his money held out he should keep his mills going, so that they might not suffer. Such things may not be good business but they show a practical application of Christianity which does credit to mankind. Another way is for the mill-owner to close his works when profits are lessened, and with his family go off to some ten dollar a day summer resort, and there bawled the hard times, leaving his employees to get along the best way they can. They are the two ways of doing business that are being illustrated in this country just at present. Of course when a mill is owned by a corporation, or is a partner in a trust, all such purely sentimental considerations are ruled out, and this is where the combinations have the advantage of individual mill-owners. A combination, like a corporation, has no conscience, and if more money can be made by shutting down, the operation can whistle for their bread. This is one of the disadvantages of a trust combination that is presented to many laboring men this summer.

BOARD OF HEALTH.

Dr. David E. Baker has declined to accept his appointment on the Board, and Dr. Francis Geo. Curtis has been appointed in his place, and confirmed. The Board now consists of Dr. Curtis of West Newton, and Messrs. Seward W. Jones of Newton Highlands and Frederick Curtis of the Lower Falls.

Mr. Jones is an energetic business man with extensive knowledge of city affairs. Mr. F. Curtis is a solicitor of patents and a practical engineer. Dr. Francis Geo. Curtis is a graduate of Harvard College and of the College of Physicians and Surgeons of New York, and is superintendent of the Newton Cottage Hospital and one of its visiting physicians and surgeons. His ample qualifications for service on the Board of Health will be acknowledged by all who are personally acquainted with him.

These men are active, capable and courteous, and Newton may be congratulated on having an efficient Board of Health, watchful of the city's sanitary condition and willing to hear and carefully investigate all complaints.

FRIENDS of Mr. Pillsbury had a quiet dinner at the Parker House, Tuesday noon, and the number of prominent Republicans who were present shows the high character of Mr. Pillsbury's backing. He is looming up in a manner to cause great uneasiness among the other aspirants. At the conference, no formal speeches were made, but the situation was talked over, and the candidate himself said several things which were warmly cheered. But he said modestly afterward that he did not say anything worth reporting, and as the official account of the meeting failed to give a report of the speech the public must go without. The conference was in session over two hours and they said, when they came out, that they were much pleased with the outlook. Of course some said that so many of the leading Republicans of the state were committed to Pillsbury that it made his success practically sure.

The West End Company has finally been granted a location on Brattle, Garden and Craigie streets by the Cambridge aldermen, for trolley wires and poles, and thus the obstacle to an electric line to Newton has been removed. It has been a long fight by the Brattle street people, who have bitterly opposed the project, but they have at last been beaten. The electric cars may be a nuisance to residents on any street through which they pass, but they are sure to come, and in this case the travelling public will be benefited, and the travel over the line from Newton to Boston will probably be largely increased.

She was a Vassar girl, and she had come to visit her sister. The sister just at this time is paying particular attention to a very small girl who will call the Vassar young woman auntie when she gets so she can talk. Besides the three mentioned females there were in the family a husband (who didn't count for much at this juncture) and a hired girl who was empress of all she surveyed.

One morning the hired girl thought it was just about time for her to visit the world's fair. Accordingly she packed her trunk and walked out, first putting a large baking of bread and two cakes in the oven. Two or three hours later the Vassar girl strolled out into the kitchen for something or other and discovered the bread and cakes burned to a crisp. Then she said several things in Greek and instituted a search for the empress. But the empress was no more. The family consultation which followed brought out the fact that the husband was obliged to eat once a day at least, and the Vassar girl boldly threw herself into the breach and declared that she would cook.

She pushed back the bangs from her classic brow, rolled up the sleeves of her empire gown and began to cook. Things ran smoothly until it came time to make the coffee. Now, it so happens that the husband is a crank about his coffee. He likes it strong. The Vassar girl knew this, and she went in to her sister and asked for instructions. The sister gave the instructions very minutely. There were a certain number of gills of water to be used and a certain number of tablespoonfuls of coffee. Dinner time came, and when the coffee was poured out it was found to be that pale, old gold color so much affected by the coffee of boarding houses. Not a word was said, but at the next meal the Vassar girl was nervous. Coffee was poured out, and it was very, very blond.

"Say," said the husband, who still continued to count for but very little, "what's the matter with this coffee?" "I'm sure I don't know," said the Vassar girl. "I made it just as I was told to."

The coffee was paler than ever at the next meal. The husband ventured to kick, but was promptly squelched. At the next meal it was so weak that the flavor could not be smelled, to say nothing of being tasted. The Vassar girl was low in her mind, but she still maintained a bold front. "I'm following your wife's recipe," she said chillingly to the husband. "I don't know that it's my fault that it isn't strong."

Dinner time came around and with it the coffee, which was but a ghost of what coffee should be. The husband looked at that which had been poured out for him and remarked, "Sure you make this stuff right, sis?"

"Certainly," replied the Vassar girl. "Don't you suppose I know enough to follow simple directions?"

"Dunno," said the husband.

"What do you mean?" asked the Vassar girl, with fine indignation.

"Oh, nothing," replied the husband pacifically. "Only it's blamed funny."

The Vassar girl looked unutterable things, and the meal proceeded in silence. Finally the husband broke out, "Say, sis, do you use that gill cup in measuring the water?"

"Yes," replied the Vassar girl shortly.

"Well, how many gills are there in a pint down at Vassar?"

"Is this a kindergarten?" asked the Vassar girl.

"No, but I just thought I would ask you."

The Vassar girl smiled a smile of infinite scorn. "At Vassar, just as everywhere else," she said loftily, "there are eight gills in a pint."

And the husband was brute enough to laugh.—Buffalo Express.

The Original Wedding Cake.

Our wedding cake is the remains of a custom whereby a Roman bride held in her left hand three wheat ears, and many centuries later an English bride wore on her head a chaplet of wheat. The attendant girls threw corn, either in grains or in small bits of biscuit or cake, upon the heads of the newly married couple, and the guests picked up the pieces and ate them. Such was the beginning of the wedding cake, which did not come into general use until the eighteenth century and was then composed of solid blocks, laid together and iced all over with sugar, so that when the outer crust was broken over the bride's head the cakes inside fell on the floor, and they were then distributed among the company.—New York Sun.

The Bull Was Scared.

An amusing incident is said to have occurred recently when one of the Armours, the great beef and pork packers of Chicago, was traveling in Spain. He was taken by a grandee of Madrid to see the national sport. When the bull came in, he sank on his knees and refused to move. Then the director called the torador and inquired the cause of the trouble, to which the torador replied, "Ah! senior, ze bull 'ave seen ze great Armour of Chicago sitting with your excellency, and zeze is no fight left in him."—London Tit-Bits.

Gradations of Color.

A very stylish young lady, taken unawares, sent Battista, her manservant, to buy her a pair of gloves with all dispatch.

"Let them give you a pair of flesh colored ones."

Battista returned with a pair of dark brown gloves.

"Did I not tell you to bring a flesh colored pair?"

"Well," said Battista, holding out his hands.—Illustrazione Popolare.

No Comparison.

"Women are cats," snapped Jarley viciously.

"Nonsense," said Dawson. "Did you ever see a woman trying to climb a fence?"—Brooklyn Life.

—The silver found by boys in a crevice of a stone wall on the Eldridge estate, Wednesday, including three napkin rings, two salt cellars and two cups, all solid, has been identified as a portion of the property stolen from the house of Mrs. J. E. Lockett, Forest street, Dec. 5, 1890. The recovered articles have been restored to the owner.

—Howard's ice houses, three in number, located on Mill street on the banks of Bullogh's pond, were destroyed by an incendiary conflagration last Friday night. A large stock of ice was destroyed. The building, adjoining, containing the engine, was saved. The loss on the burning structures and contents is estimated at about $1500.

—Robert Slater, John Beard and John Lyons were arranged for violation of a city ordinance in wantonly setting fire to trees and brush in the woods in the rear of Howard's ice houses, burned down last Friday night. Slater pleaded guilty. He said that he set a brush fire near the pond and later put it out. Beard and Lyons were charged with aiding Slater in his statement. Slater's case was continued until Sept. 2, without bail.

—Gerrault's confectionery wagon was badly demolished here Monday. The horse got frightened and ran, colliding with a tree in front of Hodgson's harness shop with such force that the cart was swung high in the air and held in its position by overhanging limbs. The candy boxes were broken and the contents strewn about, being quite a unexpected treat for juveniles who ate the sweets, dirt and all.

—Mr. E. T. Ring, formerly a resident of this place, died very suddenly Saturday in Cincinnati. He was taken ill on the street and lived only a short time. Death resulted from heart disease. Deceased was 65 years of age. For the past three years he had been engaged in business in Harbison, Tenn. He was a prominent member of the Dalhousie lodge, F. and A. M., and that organization had charge of the funeral, which occurred Tuesday afternoon. Services were held in the Newton cemetery chapel, where the interment was made. Rev. H. Usher Monro officiated. One daughter survives Mr. Ring, the wife of Counselman L. E. G. Green of this city.

—A jolly crowd of Masons took possession last Friday of the summer villa of the Union Club, situated in the suburbs of Providence. "Hauterive" is the appropriate name by which the place is known. It is a fine spot of cliff and woodland, nearly surrounded by the smooth waters of Narragansett bay. The party was under the guidance of Gethsemane commandery, K. T. of Newton, it being the second annual pilgrimage of that organization. Beside the Newton contingent the commanderies of Natick, Hyde Park, Waltham and Melrose were represented. The trip down and back was made in a special train over the Providence division of the Old Colony system of the New York, New Haven & Hartford railroad. It arrived at the Union Club grounds from Boston about 9.45 a. m., left the place, homeward bound, at 5.45 p. m. On arrival at the grounds, the boys, with visions of fish dinners in their minds, marched up the clubhouse. Here the program had its initial send off in the rendering of popular airs, the entire company joining in the choruses, while the solo parts were as judiciously distributed as possible. Mr. Samuel Shaw sung admirably, and Mr. C. C. Henry contributed some pleasing numbers. The accompaniment was played by Mr. E. Everett Burdon, who later rendered several pianoforte selections. After the concert was over, some one hit up a ball and there was a general stampede for the outdoor attractions. The great American game soon had its exemplars in a collection of players who seemed to understand the points, but who were only partially fortunate in demonstrating their knowledge of the sport. A football contest was another interesting feature worth seeing. Dr. Peterson and Mr. H. P. Dearborn scored touchdowns. A fiery deed was taxed by Mr. Alexander Chisholm who rode the mettlesome animal about the grounds. Dinner was served at 2 o'clock and, of course, the delectable treat was the old-fashioned clam bake. There was a cessation of sports in the afternoon and a trip was made from Silver Springs to Rocky Point and return in the Steamer City of Newton.

—Fred H. Burdon has returned from the South where he has been engaged in business in connection with Scribner's publication. He held an important position and successfully discharged its duties. He is one of many Newton boys who have made a good record for themselves.

—The common councilmen seem to appreciate the possibilities of difficulties in the way of borrowing money, because of the present financial hurry. They set down effectively on nearly all the certificate loan orders Monday night and then adjourned until September. The boulevard loan order was tabled, but the order for seizing the land was passed.

—A group of juvenile offenders, ranging in age from 16 to 8 years, was arranged in the police court yesterday. Fred Booth, Thomas Miller, John Boyce and Andrew Barnes were charged with entering the house of Eugene Colbert on Watertown street, and for the larceny thereof of 12 bottles of beer and a dozen eggs. Beside taking these articles, it was alleged that the boys damaged the carpets and furniture by throwing the eggs about the place and breaking some of the beer bottles, spilling the contents of the latter. The four boys pleaded guilty, and one little urchin seemed to regard the affair as a huge joke until admonished by the court to refrain from further uttering. The caution had its immediate effect, and his countenance at once assumed a grave and troubled look in striking contrast to his original assumed air of bravado. State Agent Bagley recommended leniency of the court in the sentence of Miller, Boyce and Barnes, and Judge Kennedy continued their cases until Oct. 1. Booth was committed to the Concord reformatory.

BOOHI!

On afternoons, when baby has had a splendid nap
And sits, like any monarch on his throne, in nurse's lap,
In some such wise my handkerchief I hold before my face,
And cautiously and quietly I move about the place;
Then with a cry I suddenly expose my face to view,
And you should hear him laugh and crow when I say "Boohi!"

Sometimes that racial tries to make believe that he's scared,
And, really, when he first began, he stared and stared and stared,
And then his under lip came out, and farther out it came,
Till mamma and the nurse agreed it was a "cruel shame!"

But now what does that same wee tottling, lispng baby do
But laugh and kick his little heels when I say
"Boohi!"

He laughs and kicks his little heels in rapturous glee and then
In shrill, despotie treble bids me "Do it all again!"

And I—of course I do it, for, as his progenitor,
It is such pretty, pleasant play as this that I am for!

And it is, oh, such fun, and I am sure that I shall rue
The time when we are both too old to play the game of "Boohi!"

ANOTHER'S SISTER.

Let us all pray to be delivered from the sin of hasty judgment. When I first beheld four or five modern comedies adapted from the French language, wherein the situations were all due to somebody, chiefly a she, entering somebody else's apartments, chiefly a he, I scolded audibly. The thing was absurd, outworn and cheap. But now that has happened which has caused me to know a great deal more about French comedies and critical situations than all the most successful playwrights put together.

In the first place I occupied (and still do occupy) chambers which consist of two rooms connected by a tiny hallway giving on to the landing by one door.
Therefore it will be plain to the meanest mind that once the hall-door is occupied by the enemy, the only other exit is from the window by way of the gutter pipe—a vertical distance of three stories. There should always be two ways, not including the window, out of every set of chambers.

This need had never presented itself to me until one memorable afternoon, when without knock, word or warning a round faced, golden haired, blue eyed maiden in an astrakhan faced jacket, a gray skirt and a black velvet hat charged into my room after the most approved fashion of all the comedies, crying,
"Dear old Joe!"

My name was not and never will be
Joe. There was no need for explanations.
Sister, and only sister, was stamped all over the face of the maiden. Everybody who has been possessed of an only sister understands the manner in which one of the tribe enters a brother's rooms.

The maiden gave a little scream as I turned. She apologized. Could I tell her whereabouts Mr. Joseph Rupard's chambers were?

I could not—for you may live 17 years in chambers without knowing the face, life or occupation of any one of your fellow convicts. I suggested that she should speak to the housekeeper and escorted her to the tiny hall aforesaid.

You will observe that there was nothing whatever in these proceedings to bring a blush to the thinnest cheek.

The imp of perversity, who is generally playing about on the landing for 6 shillings a week, met me in the hallway, saying, "Lady and gentleman to see you, sir."

Behind him stood two figures that I knew, and at any other time would have received with joy.

The maiden at my heels lost her singularly pretty head, and whispering
"What shall I do?" bolted back into the sitting room.

All this was strictly in accordance with the rules of the stage, but why it should have taken place in my chambers
I could never understand. And yet I was deeply thankful that she had not gone forth, like Uncle, under the noses of my visitors. Uncle John—yes, it was an uncle, even as is the case in a comedy—would have laughed, and since she was another man's sister that would have been even worse than Aunt Alice's hawk-eyed inspection of the maiden, and subsequent description of her face, figure and dress to all her righteous world.

I received my people in the hallway.
An inspiration told me to get rid of my coat and rumple my hair. Desperate fear made me very wise, most courteous and genial to excess.

"Oh, so glad to see you," said I, "but I'm afraid you've come to a regular camp in the wilderness. Fact is, my sitting room is upside down—that fool of a housemaid has been doing something to the fire that has filled the place with smuts, and I've made her dust everything out again. But come into the bedroom, since you've taken the trouble to climb all these stairs." Even as I spoke in the hall, I heard the heavy armchair wheeled up against my sitting room door, and there was a sound of emphatic dusting. I thanked heaven that was pleased to afflict me that it had sent at least "one heart still ready to play out the play."

Into my humble bedroom I led those relatives, and my aunt, after the manner of women, made scorching cleaning with her eye and inquired as to whether I was well looked after. But it was the antipathetic kiss and the remark that followed—"My boy, how hot you are! Aren't you well?"—that seared my perfectly innocent soul like hot iron.
Perfect crime must bring with it a sense of ease and rest. It is the unmerited imputation of evil that strains the nerves.

My aunt would fain have had tea,
"when that girl had finished cleaning your rooms." The bedroom door was of course open. I assured my aunt that the folly of that housemaid prevented her from finishing anything this side of doomsday, and that the dust would not settle down till 20 minutes after that.

There was a cawing, choking noise, and I saw a pair of feet sticking out from under the door.

"What a very superior voice she has!"
said Aunt Alice. "Quite like a lady's.
Is she pretty?"

"Come and see," quoth I, with that icy innocence that only cunning can bestow. I half opened the sitting room door, coughed vehemently and drew back as one choked with dust.

"Impossible," I said. "She's not in a sweet temper today because I made her do the rooms twice. We'd better not disturb her, or she'll break my ornaments." This, meseems, could not have been excelled by the most hardened profligate on the stage.

My aunt left very slowly and deliberately, mourning for the loss of her tea.
I escorted her and Uncle John down to the first floor. How could I tell that her housewifely zeal for her nephew could have led her to bestow upon the housemaid, who was Fan of the Teeth, a few hints on the best management of the and the proper care of the room, which the fellow servant was even then supposed to be cleaning?

"You see, it all means more work for you in the end," said my aunt.

I dashed into the sitting room to find, helpless with suppressed laughter, the maiden with the black velvet hat. I was coatsless, as has been recounted—people never stay long with a man who lacks a coat—my hair was on end, and I was flushed. But there was no resisting that infection of mirth. I laughed aloud. The air was dense with dust, and all the furniture was out of place. "That fool of a housemaid!" had lived up to her reputation.

"Haven't I done the room beautif-fully?" she said, with a wicked giggle.
"Thank you—thank you, oh, so much for helping me!"

"Not in the least," said I. "I've got a sister of my own. But hadn't you better?"

"I'm gone," she said, and vanished at the word to hunt for her brother's chambers.

Entered, her cap over one eye, Fan of the Teeth, boiling with rage. She was an austere woman of 35, not to be trifled with.

"And I'm sure me and Lucy, too, we takes all the trouble that we can with 17 sets of chambers to be gone through, and the bells ringing on every landing all day long. 'Tisn't as if I was afraid of my work, for I've kept myself ever since I was a little girl of thirteen, nor Lucy neither. But when that lady on the staircase spoke to me an tole me that I was inattentive an Lucy, too, an smuts all about your room, sayin that I was to take extra care of you, sir,
I was put out."

"Do as you would be done by, I think, an show no favor to any chambers more than another, for some one must lose by it, and if it isn't you it will be some other gentleman. An there aren't no smuts in your room not to be seen, an Lucy, I know she's been on the fourth floor since I come down with the slops, but I didn't say nothink to that lady when she said what she said—an Lor, sir, what 'ave you been doin to the furniture—all pulled across the room? An you 'avin to see your friends in your bedroom—as if it was our fault!"

"Fanny," said I, "if there has been any fault, that fault is mine. Take, oh, take those lips away, and—here's a half sovereign."

It was a damning confession of guilt, received as such. Fan removed herself with an unholy light in her eye.

I hated Fan, and this still further shook my nerves. Worn with a thousand conflicting emotions, I fled to the sideboard and pulled myself together with the necessary liquids. Men never seem to do that on the stage after any unusual cir-cums. They do in the prosaic world of real life.

Re-entered Fan, the half sovereign in her hand, and placed it on my table.

"I've took them in their teas," she said oracularly, "an she was tellin' me all about it. She is a real nice little lady, she is, an—I don't want no 'arf suffering for that."

No comedy that I could think of had any mention of the soubrette—to be sure, Fan was rather too angular for the soubrette—refusing a tip.

"And you're a lady, too, Fan," said I.
"Keep it. Few people return money.
Still fewer dismiss preconceived suspicions."

She withdrew slightly alarmed.

I stepped into the hallway to set down
the empty soda water siphon in the place appointed. The door leading to the landing was half open. I heard voices descending the stairs.

"He was really very nice, Joe, about
it. Said he had a sister of his own and laughed."

"Humph. Then I'm sorry for his sister, that's all. He drinks like a fish.
Why, only last night I found him on his hands and knees on the second floor
and had to help him to bed."

The next chambers! As I hope to clear my character before all judges, it was the man in the next chambers! I had heard the infernal din of that episode at 2 o'clock in the morning, and a few of Joe's comments as he left the drunkard.
How should the maiden know exactly
into whose rooms she had penetrated,
and here was Joe saddling me with my neighbor's booted slumbers.

I gripped the siphon head in an agony
of wrath. The steps were almost opposite my landing. There was more soda water than I thought for in the tube, and the infernal concoction exhausted itself with a fizzle, spit and grunt. It seemed to roar through the house.

"There!" said Joe. "You hear, Milly?
That's a soda water siphon. He's at it again—so early."

"But he didn't look as if he took!"
The sweet voice died away, and I was alone with my sorrow and my siphon.

Today I know something of plot and construction, and, as I say, I understand the verisimilitude of the modern French farce. Yet would I sell all my insight for the single privilege of explaining to Milly (my Milly—she has dusted my room) that I am not—indeed
I am not—the villain that Joe painted
me.—St. James Gazette.

that might have been a smothered chuckle, from the sitting room, whereof the fanlight above the door was open.

"What a very superior voice she has!"
said Aunt Alice. "Quite like a lady's.

I stepped into the hallway to set down
the empty soda water siphon in the place appointed. The door leading to the landing was half open. I heard voices descending the stairs.

"He was really very nice, Joe, about
it. Said he had a sister of his own and laughed."

"Humph. Then I'm sorry for his sister, that's all. He drinks like a fish.
Why, only last night I found him on his hands and knees on the second floor
and had to help him to bed."

The next chambers! As I hope to clear
my character before all judges, it was the man in the next chambers! I had heard the infernal din of that episode at 2 o'clock in the morning, and a few of Joe's comments as he left the drunkard.
How should the maiden know exactly
and here was Joe saddling me with my neighbor's booted slumbers.

I gripped the siphon head in an agony
of wrath. The steps were almost opposite my landing. There was more soda
water than I thought for in the tube, and
the infernal concoction exhausted itself
with a fizzle, spit and grunt. It seemed to roar through the house.

"There!" said Joe. "You hear, Milly?
That's a soda water siphon. He's at it again—so early."

"But he didn't look as if he took!"
The sweet voice died away, and I was alone with my sorrow and my siphon.

Today I know something of plot and construction, and, as I say, I understand the verisimilitude of the modern French farce. Yet would I sell all my insight for the single privilege of explaining to Milly (my Milly—she has dusted my room) that I am not—indeed
I am not—the villain that Joe painted
me.—St. James Gazette.

SUNDAY AMUSEMENT.

IN MEXICO A PRIEST SENDS HIS BIRDS TO A COCK FIGHT.

An Enthusiastic Lover of Game Roosters
Entertains His Congregation With Rare Contests Between Belligerent Cocks.
One Sunday's Sport.

"It was in a Mexican village," said the explorer. "Great had been our surprise the evening before when a little after 5 o'clock we rode into the public square up to the door of the convent and observed a long line of game cocks guarding one side of the great church. Well, that was our first impression. Closer inspection made things plainer. In the convent, residence of only the priest and his relations, we hung our hammocks, rested awhile, refreshed the inner man with tortillas and black beans, then went forth to investigate the feathered regiment. The large church was built out into the square, so that its rear wall was on a line with the convent and other structures forming that side of the square.

"Along the wall that stood at right angles with the front of the convent small wooden stakes had been driven in the ground. To each a plumed warrior was securely attached at a safe distance from his valiant compeers. Who could have dared to utilize for such a purpose the shade afforded by the wall of the sacred edifice? Another instant and we should have voiced this thought. It is generally a mistake to speak in a hurry. The good old priest had followed us and was now at our side. Pointing a lean brown finger at a very proud looking rooster, he said: 'That is the prince of this lot, though they will all prove themselves splendid fighters, I know! I have not studied the creatures 40 years for nothing!'
So! They were his own property! Yes, another five minutes' talk made it plain that the pet hobby of this holy man was cock fighting! We will call him Father F. because it is not necessary to give the name of our kind host. Fairly launched on his favorite topic, he talked away for a full hour and was utterly amazed, not to say somewhat incredulous, when informed that we had never seen a professional tussle between those birds so dear to his heart and purse, and which he loved to see fighting in the ring. 'But you must come with me tomorrow afternoon,' said he; 'the people here all like it, and we enjoy the harmless sport every Sunday afternoon.'
He intended no sarcasm.

"Nolens volens, when Sunday afternoon came, our host, having laid aside his sacerdotal robes after celebrating high mass, piloted us to the scene of action. The pit was in the interior corner of a private house. A circular yard of slender sticks surrounded the carefully leveled ground dedicated to the carnage. Chairs surrounded it, and a shed, thatched with palm leaves, sheltered the spot from the scorching rays of the sun. In gay attire the most respected matrons and maidens of the place were there, the performance being contenanced and partly provided by the priest. A lively conversation was kept up, all present being acquainted.
The roosters had been shorn of their feathers, save those of the wings and tail. Each bird was weighed; then curved steel spurs were secured to the stumps of those provided by nature, but which had been cut off. Quite suddenly conversation ceases. Two birds are in the ring. The struggle commences.
Heads lowered, eyes glaring, quivering with rage, the heroes fly at each other.

"Calculating that his opponent has jumped too high, the other one crouches, avoids the blow and turns upon his foe, who stands firm. Both rise in the air, breast striking against breast, each striving to deal his adversary a mortal blow.
One is stabbed—he staggers. Profiting by this weakness, his adversary follows up the attack, but the wounded one keeps an eye on his enemy, and not being ready for him dodges, regains his position and inflicts a wound. Both now have difficulty in keeping on their feet, though neither will yield. More wounds are dealt. Both fall exhausted. One recovers, sees his foe prostrate, so does not attack, but shakes his lowered head and claws the ground in his fury. Impatiently he thirsts for the life of his opponent, who, no less savage, regains his feet, and with glaring eyes watches every move of his adversary.

"The enthusiasm of their owners and backers increases as the wounds become more numerous—the excitement is intense, and bets run high. The creatures engaged in deadly strife keep cooler than the audience. A moment arrives when all the backers talk at once. 'Five dollars more on the white!' 'Ten on the cancelo' (cinnamon color). The stakes do not exceed $50. At last one warrior falls. Dead silence follows, so great is the suspense. Will he rise once more?
Victor examines victim very distrust-fully, makes sure he is dead, then mounting on the prostrate form draws himself up with an exultant cry of victory, just like some gladiator of olden times.

"All through the long summer afternoon one battle succeeded another. The birds that survived were taken home to be carefully tended until restored enough to fight again. Even those that had lost one or both eyes would fight if an opportunity was given to them, for these birds are so ferociously brave that

Ten years of age, but who declines to give his name to the public, makes this authorized, confidential statement to us:

"When I was one year old, my mamma died of consumption. The doctor said that I, too, would soon die, and all our neighbors thought that even if I did not die, I would never be able to walk, because I was so weak and puny. A gathering formed and broke under my arm. I hurt my finger and it gathered and threw out pieces of bone. If I hurt myself so as to break the skin, it was sure to become a running sore. I had to take lots of medicine, but nothing has done me so much good as Ayer's Sarsaparilla. It has made me well and strong."—T. D. M., Norcutt, Kans.

Literary Notes.

The second volume in the "Distaff Series" of books written, edited, and made by women, will be published by Harper & Brothers on August 1st under the title, The Literature of Philanthropy. Its editor is Mrs. Frances A. Goodale. It will be followed about the middle of August by Early Prose and Verse, edited by Mrs. Alice Morse Earle and Mrs. Emily Ellsworth Ford.

Mr. E. L. Weeks's description of the journey by caravan from the Black Sea to the Persian Gulf, on which Mr. Theodore Child lost his life, will begin in the October Harper's Magazine. Mr. Weeks was the artist of the undertaking, and his illustrations for the articles are unusually strong and interesting.

The September Harper's will contain an account of Mr. Richard Harding Davis's experience during a political campaign in England as the companion of a Conservative Candidate for Parliament. The lively narrative will be embellished with ten illustrations by W. Hatherell.

Mrs. F. A. Steel, like Mr. Kipling, has gained distinction by her fresh and forcible pictures of life in India. She knows the life of the native women and children as well as the more obvious phases of Indian existence, and her forthcoming book, From the Five Rivers, is described as a remarkable work in its mingling of fresh humor and true pathos. It will be published immediately in Appleton's Town and Country Library.

Miss Kate Sanborn, the brilliant author of "Adopting an Abandoned Farm," has written another entertaining book entitled "A Truthful Woman in Southern California," which will be published immediately in Appleton's dainty Summer Series. Miss Sanborn sketches her experiences at Los Angeles, San Diego, Coronado Beach, and elsewhere, and her sketches of the life as well as the country are invariably original, humorous, and amusing.

Some things that he has said the last few weeks leads one to wonder if he has not taken the responsibility of running the city government into his hands. Looking after the finances, instructing the members of the city government how to vote and arranging papers that ought to have prompt attention in a way to suit his own convenience, is worthy of one that does everything in CONFIDENCE.

THE SUMMER NIGHTS OF LONG AGO.

Sing me a little song as night draws nigh,
Tender and loving, sweet and soft and low;
And then I'll say a tearful last goodbye
To the fond remembered nights of long ago.
O moon serene, that shone on youth's bright shore
And lit the grassy slope with purest glow,
Cast a bright ray down Time's ensnared floor
From the faroff summer nights of long ago!
"Tis all in vain! The joyous laugh that rang Is still. The bitter words and tears that flow Fanned the voices wake of those who sang
In the starlit summer nights of long ago."
—F. C. Spaulding.

THAT OLD VIOLIN.

"Here comes the doctor, Drascovy. Now I can introduce you," said Mrs. Vincent, pulling up her ponies sharply as she came alongside a gentleman who was walking leisurely out of Brighton on the London road.

"Dr. Manfield, this is M. Drascovy, of whom I have told you. It is very lucky, our meeting now, for he only stays with me another 24 hours or so, and I do want him to see your violins. May he do so?"

"With pleasure, Mrs. Vincent. I shall only be too glad if he will see them and perhaps bring out some of the sound that now lies dormant in them. When will you come, monsieur?"

"At any time tomorrow that may be convenient to you, Dr. Manfield."

"Then say after lunch, about half past 2; I am not likely to be engaged then."

After a few minutes' conversation they said goodbye, and Mrs. Vincent whipped up her ponies and drove into Brighton to let her lion roar, as she laughingly said to Drascovy, the rising violinist, with a great future before him, so the critics said. Dr. Manfield was something of a musician and had an odd fancy for picking up stray instruments here and there, some of them valuable, others of no worth, for the doctor did not really know enough about violins always to judge correctly their value, consequently he was well pleased that M. Drascovy should come and give his opinion and play on some of them.

The violinist turned up at the appointed time, and soon Dr. Manfield brought out the first—a violin in dark mahogany, evidently old and well seasoned. Drascovy made some alteration in the stringing, and having tuned the instrument the room was presently flooded with a perfect volume of melody. For some time he went on playing, then ended with something like a sigh and put down the violin with a nod of approval.

"Good, very good," he said.

"I thought so, monsieur. What is that violin worth?"

"Three hundred pounds at least. It is a beauty—one of the best I have ever played on."

"Here is another that seems to me good. Will you try it?"

Once again there was approbation on the musician's face.

"And here," said the doctor, "is one I picked up last year in France, and I don't quite know what to make of it. Somehow or other I never cared."

There was a knock at the door, and the doctor's page entered.

"Bad accident, sir, in the surgery; will you come?"

"You must excuse me, monsieur. You will be able to amuse yourself till I am able to return, I hope."

Drascovy did not reply, and the doctor in his hurry did not notice that his guest was gazing in speechless wonder at the instrument that had just been shown to him. His hand trembled as he took it up lovingly, tenderly. "Is it possible," he murmured, "the realization of my dream, or am I still asleep? A virgin Stradivarius! Surely this is imagination, it cannot be reality!"

He could hardly string and tune it, his hands so shook, but soon he took up a bow and seemed to listen entranced at his own music. Then he put down the violin and pressed his hand to his forehead, pacing up and down the room. Anon he played again and then took it to the window for a better light. He literally caressed it with his long, thin fingers. He knew there was fame and fortune in that instrument with one who could do it justice. He must have it at any cost.

But he was not rich; he could not pay the money it was worth. Then he played again, and a thought came to him.

He would dissemble. The doctor did not know its worth. He would not tell him, but he would hint that he would buy it. His resolve taken, he had time to calm himself before the doctor reappeared, and then they went on talking. Drascovy hardly able to take his eyes off the Stradivarius. Presently he rose to go.

"Yes, your two instruments are good, very good. By the bye, would you care to part with the third?" making a desperate effort to appear calm. "I have a pupil I should like it for."

"Oh, well, yes; I don't mind, if you will fix what you consider a fair price!" Drascovy winced.

"Ten pounds?" he asked.

"Yes, if you judge that to be its worth."

He took the violin home to Mrs. Vincent, but he did not tell her much about it. He went to his room, and for the next 24 hours he never left it. Once they took him something to eat, but he sat or stood and played till Mrs. Vincent was quite vexed only as she said you never could tell what a genius was going to do next. She supposed he had an inspiration.

"My dear M. Drascovy! Can it be two years since we saw you in Brighton? Are you never coming to see me again? All my friends are anxious to congratulate you on your late phenomenal successes, so do come and dine with me on Tuesday or any day you like to name. Now, I shall really take no refusal. By the bye, have you heard of poor Dr. Manfield's sudden death—heart disease? His daughter is with me now. She was left so very poor, for he was deeply in debt. I should like you to see her. Sincerely yours, Mildred Vincent."

Could he meet her, Drascovy thought, the daughter of the man he had defrauded. No! He would refuse, and yet as he sat down to write the note something made him accept.

He was not a happy man. Through all his great success, due so largely to that wonderful violin, there had been the skeleton at the feast, and now the doctor was dead and his daughter unprotected for living, it seemed, on charity.

"M. Drascovy—Miss Manfield," said Mrs. Vincent.

He saw a tall, queenly woman, with lustrous brown eyes and bright, fair hair, dressed in a deep black gown, relieved by the least touch of white about the throat. Her movements were slow and very graceful, and when she spoke it was in a low voice full of melody. She was very beautiful. He could hardly take his eyes off her, and yet, if she happened to look toward him, he started and cast down his eyes. He could not sleep that night. He knew there was only one woman in the world for him, and she—was the daughter of the man he had robbed! It was well, or ill, for him that he could not see her next day, sitting by a couch on which a sick man lay, one hand in his, the other stroking his hair. "Patience, dear heart, patience," she whispered, "things will be better soon. I shall get introductions and pupils through Mrs. Vincent, and then, dear, it will be all right. You must be content to wait till then, for you know I shall be always true and loving."

"But it is so hard for you, Nellie. I cannot tie you to a cripple, to a life of toil for one so helpless as I am. Oh, it is hard that this should have happened to me, when six months ago I was strong and vigorous."

"Maybe it is better, dear; it should bring us closer together, and in years you may recover, perhaps. And now I will read to you, or we will talk together." And so the brave, strong woman helped the man she had loved so long and still loved, even now that he was condemned to lie on a couch for his lifetime through an accident in a London street. He was poor, and so was she. The working and waiting would be very hard, but she would persevere and conquer. Drascovy was often to be found at Mrs. Vincent's house during the next fortnight, and one afternoon, to his great delight, he found Mrs. Vincent out and Miss Manfield alone in the drawing room.

Ten minutes later he had told her he loved her—had asked her to be his wife.

She hid her face in her hand and bade him be silent.

"You do not understand; how should you?" she said. "I cannot think of what you ask, for if ever I marry it will be to some one very different to yourself—to one who loves me, whom I love, and who is now a helpless invalid on his couch. You are rich, and he and I are poor, but I am going to work hard, and some day I shall be his wife if we are ever rich enough, for you see it will be an uphill task getting singing pupils. You understand now, do you not, and will never ask me any more?"

She looked at him and saw his dark, handsome face working convulsively.

"I am sorry if I have given you pain," she said, for he did not speak, "but you will soon get over it. You are rich and have the world at your feet; all that fame and fortune can give you."

"Except yourself, the only gift that can bring me happiness. Ah, child, you little know of the curse there is on my fortune, on my life itself. But you shall know, though I cannot tell you now. Goodbye; forgive me if you can."

He hurried from the room, and presently she heard the hall door bang. She sat still for a long time, pondering his strange words and distressed manner, wondering what he could have to tell her.

That night the mystery was solved. By the last post there came a registered letter, thick and bulky. She slipped it into her pocket to read in her bedroom, for she knew it was from Drascovy.

For a long time she sat before the fire that was burning brightly, and her beautiful eyes were full of tears as she thought of her poor crippled lover and asked herself why she was so poor, why some people had so much wealth and she so little that she could not help and live for the man she loved so well. The tears fell one by one down her cheeks, and as she put her hand in her pocket for her handkerchief she encountered Drascovy's letter.

She broke the seal, and found to her amazement that besides a closely written letter there were 20 bank notes, each for £100. She was too utterly astonished even to conjecture the meaning or cause of this. She could only gaze at the notes until she remembered the letter.

What need to go into details? It was simply a complete confession of what Drascovy had done to obtain the Stradivarius, begging her forgiveness and future friendship and inclosing notes for £2,000 as payment for the instrument.

In four years' time, if he were still successful, he said he must send her a like sum again; it was her right, her due, for the violin had done half toward making his fortune.

Nellie Manfield sat and wondered and thought and wept tears of joy over the unexpected good fortune that had come to her till the fire was nothing but a few dead coals in the grate, and a clock outside struck 3. Then she roused herself with a shiver, and having thought how she would go to her lover and tell him tomorrow, how she would soon get on in the world with this to start upon, having told herself that she must indeed forgive Drascovy, she was soon asleep in a happy, dreamless slumber.

There is hardly need for more. Drascovy is dead and has left half his fortune to the woman whose father he had wronged. She has been Nellie Harvey for years now, and her husband, although he will never be quite so strong as other men, is something better than a cripple, and, best of all, they are perfectly happy.—Exchange.

Voyage of a Bottle.

During a stroll upon the beach of Paramore's island, Va., a few days ago, a member of our editorial staff picked up a tightly corked bottle that had been washed to his feet by the waves.

The bottle contained a letter written by a romantic young lady, resident at Asbury Park, N. J., and committed to the sea by her upon March 13 last. Unfortunately for those who would like to see or hear of a romance growing out of this incident, the finder is a married man with an interesting family.—Philadelphia Ledger.

Cooper, Supt. of Little Wanderers' home, Boston, Mass., 7 p. m.

—The change made last week by the Newton & Boston street railway in running the Newton Centre cars to the junction of Homer and Walnut streets, instead of continuing them through to Newtonville square is a decided improvement and much more accommodating to our citizens. The trips are made every twenty minutes as formerly and a car for Newtonville and for the Highlands and Upper Falls respectively on the main line are met at the Homer street terminus each trip. Arrangements are also being made regarding transfer checks so that one can ride from here to Watertown, via the Newtonville & Watertown line for seven cents.

—On Thursday the members of the choir of the Church of the Sacred Heart, together with the Sunday school teachers and the juvenile choir, forming a party of seventy-five ladies and gentlemen, were the guests of their pastor, Rev. D. J. Wholey, who showed his appreciation of the services rendered by them during the past year, by giving them an outing at Nantasket beach. The party left Newton Centre in a special car on the 8:26 a. m. train. Arriving in Boston they proceeded to the wharf to the steamer Mayflower for Nantasket. On arriving at Nantasket they went to Hotel Standish where arrangements for their reception and entertainment had been made. Music, dancing and singing were indulged in until 1 o'clock p. m. when all sat down to an excellent dinner prepared under the direction of the genial proprietor, R. C. Davis. Supper was served at 6:30 p. m. then all assembled in the large parlor and were entertained with instrumental and vocal selections rendered by members of the choir and by the teachers of the Sunday School. The return trip to Boston was made on the 8 o'clock boat. The party reached Newton Centre at 10 o'clock p. m. Already they are looking forward to the summer of 1894 for their annual summer excursion.

—Conductor Harry Childs was knocked senseless from the foot board of his car Wednesday afternoon by a lumber team. Dr. Talbot attended him and he was taken home. His injuries are not serious.

—Miss Nellie Daly, daughter of Mr. Edmund Daly, died Saturday morning after quite a long illness. The funeral services were held Sunday morning at St. Mary's church, Rev. Father Dancy officiating. Interment at Needham.

—Notwithstanding the warm weather and the absence of many from town, Echo Bridge Council, Royal Arcanum, follows the even order of its way and at the last meeting received three new applications for membership.

—Echo Bridge Park opened Sunday as usual and has been filled with gay pleasure seekers each evening during the present week. Chief Brewer is still at his accustomed place and finds many who appreciate his courteous ways and superior lunches.

—The Baptist church society have arranged for a public meeting to be held in the church vestry next Tuesday evening, Aug. 8, the object being to devise some settled plan and raise funds to paint the church edifice. The money necessary for painting and necessary repairs is about $150 and about $50 has already been secured. The meeting is made public to allow anyone so disposed to aid the society in their endeavor.

—Among the passengers on the Cunard steamship arriving Monday was Miss Lizzie Kidway of Cheshire, Eng. The circumstances leading to her arrival in this country are somewhat of a romantic nature. Last spring Josiah Brown, one of our young townsmen, paid a visit to friends in the old country, and while there became acquainted with Miss Kidway. He returned home late in December and the arrival of the money necessary for the marriage and the announcement of their marriage to occur next Wednesday was a surprise of the most genuine character to the young man's family, as he had made no previous mention of his intentions. May the trust inspired by facing the water and life in a new country never be found to have been misplaced, and the congratulations of many friends will go with the young couple.

NEWTON LOWER FALLS.

—The Misses Leonard are spending a week's vacation at Nantasket Beach.

—The Dudley Mills are expected to resume operation Monday, after a shut down of four weeks.

—The youngest daughter, Beatrice, of Mr. and Mrs. Hobson Swallow, is now improving from an illness, which early this week was dangerous.

—The brass band connected with St. John's church, has received quite a little unsolicited advertising through the press recently, that undoubtedly helped them secure an engagement for Labor Day.

—Mr. E. H. Whitney's residence on Glen road, was a attraction for bargains in Friday night. They made but a little haul seeming anxious to get away in a hurry.

A Financial Scare.

(From the Washington Star.)

"Come hither, men," said Captain Kidd to the two seamen who carried a cracker box with much evident difficulty. "Come hither."

As soon as they had done so he took off his broad-brimmed hat, in which he wore a feather instead of a string, and scanned the horizon. It seemed to be a satisfactory horizon, for he turned with a sigh of relief and said:

"I think we will put the money in your river bank."

"But, captaining," said one of the men, "that bank is not safe."

"No," said the other, "it's liable to collapse under the slightest pressure."

"Peace, fools," said Capt. Kidd, angrily, "at last I have penetrated the secret of your identities. You are the men who go around precipitating panics."

Thereupon he took up his mattock and slew them, so that no one might be left to tell the tale.

Then he dug a hole himself, deposited his doubloons, wrote himself a receipt, and at last accounts the money was there yet.

Tremont Theatre.

The successful summer season at the Tremont Theatre shows the wisdom of Messrs. Abbey, Schoeffel & Grau in providing entertainments of the better class for the amusement of those who are staying in town during the heated term, and the favor with which the Pauline Hall Opera Company and the special attractions have been received plainly indicate the drawing powers of a musical organization which is headed by one of the most popular artists of the day, the brilliant and magnetic Pauline Hall. After five weeks of "Amorita," Manager McLellan has revived "Puritania," the great success of last season, and if the audiences of the present week are a criterion, the entertaining story of New England witchcraft will duplicate the hit it made at the Tremont last year where it was produced for the first time on any stage and ran 100 nights, attracting large houses. The same careful direction and elaborate staging is noticeable in the present production. As a special new feature, Miss Dorothy Denning appears in a beautiful rainbow dance in which the figure of the fair and willowy young artist is lighted up by rapidly changing hues, producing a very striking effect.

have been stopping at North Scituate beach.

—Mr. Chas. F. Rogers, Jr., has returned from Holderness, N. H., and is again in charge of his real estate business.

—Mrs. M. A. Livermore starts for Chicago to-morrow, and will be gone three weeks.

—Mr. Geo. L. Pearson left Tuesday to join his family at Paradise, N. S., and will bring them home next week.

—Elliot church has had its annual summer cleaning, and the carpets have been taken up, freed from dust, and put down again. Myles J. Joyce had charge of the work.

—Master Walter and Miss Ethel Jayhave returned from two weeks at Nantucket and Salem Willows.

—Mr. Geo. F. Livermore and family have returned from a month's visit at Fitzwilliam, N. H.

—Curt N. Jackson and Arthur M. Jackson have gone to the Diamond Lodge House, Sandwich.

—Mr. and Mrs. Wm. O. Delano and family are staying at the Myles Standish House, Duxbury.

—Mrs. Horace Davis of San Francisco who has been visiting friends in this city left on Tuesday for California, accompanied by Miss Hattie Wiggin.

—Rev. Geo. Geyer, the very popular young minister of Hope Chapel, Boston, will preach at the Methodist church next Sunday morning. Rev. Mr. Bronson will preach as usual in the evening.

—A frame dwelling house and a lot of land, containing 6500 square feet, on Adams street, was sold by S. S. Gleason to Margaret Jones for $1825.

—Lt. Keene of the regular army, who is stationed in the far west, is with his family visiting his father-in-law, Mr. J. P.
Lovell, of Tremont street.

—Superintendent of Streets Chas. W.
Ross attended the field day of the Mass.
Highway Association of Salem Willows on Tuesday.

—J. Henry Bacon does not believe in dull times, and he has arranged a great mark down sale of seasonal dry goods for the next eight days, and offers bargains of every kind to Newton people. Visitors will be surprised to find how much a little money will buy.

—Mr. J. Herbert Park took part in a sacred concert at the Atlantic House, Juniper Point, Salem Willows, last Sunday evening, singing the tenor solo by Gounod, "The Guardian Angel," and also singing in duet with Mr. E. W. Merrill, the tenor vocalist.

—A civil service examination for carriers was held Saturday morning in the postoffice. Nine candidates prepared papers which were forwarded to the civil service commission at Washington. The examination was conducted by the local board comprising P. R. Mullen, J. I. Farwell and E. A. Lowe.

—This city was visited by the severest storm of the season on Sunday afternoon. The rain fell in torrents for nearly an hour and the wind blew a stiff gale. In sections of the city the deluge of water was accompanied by a fall of hail stones about the size of an ordinary marble. Quite a number of windows were broken in both houses at Riverside and in houses in the Newtonville district. The wind tore a pole signal box from its position on a pole located on Winter street, Newton Highlands, and carried it a distance of 100 feet. The damage to the telegraph, police and telephone lines was only slight. Several sewer trenches caved in and the city will be called upon to expend some $5,000 for repaving streets, which were washed out by the rain.

—The Newton Street Railway had two generators disabled at Waltham by Sunday's storm, which left only one in working order, and consequently the cars ran on only half hour time Monday afternoon.
Monday noon the guard wire in front of City Hall was struck by lightning and fell across the trolley, burning apart and creating quite a sensation, as the two ends lay snuffering in the gutter. They were soon taken care of, and the damage was slight.
The numerous floods along the streets covered the tracks in places with several inches of slimy mud, which interfered with the running of the cars, and had to be cleaned off by hand. On Tuesday the Newton company and the Watertown company were supplied with power from the Newton & Boston's new power house, while the generators at Waltham are being repaired.

—A serious accident was narrowly averted at the Centre street crossing of the Boston & Albany railroad Monday evening.
The 9.45 outward bound fast express very nearly ran down a back, the rear wheels of the carriage just clearing the locomotive.
It was the closest call at that crossing in recent years. The gates were up, and the driver of the back supposed that everything was all right, and that no train was approaching. A shrill warning was uttered by a bystander just as the carriage reached the crossing, and the driver then realized his danger, made use of his whip, swinging it once across the backs of the leisurely moving horses. It had the desired effect.

The animals jumped forward, and only in time to avoid a collision, which, in all probability, would have resulted in the loss of human life. The gate man claims that his gongs were not working, and offers that as an excuse for failing to lower the gates.

—Mr. Thurston, one of the Hawaiian commissioners has been the guest of Senator Gilman, the past week.

today for a short vacation trip to Maine.

—Mr. Stephen King of Honolulu, was the zar is spending part of her vacation at Newport.

—Rev. Edward F. Hayward of Marlboro, will preach at Channing Church on Sunday.

—Rev. H. A. Stimson of the Broadway Tabernacle, New York, will preach at the Elliot Church on Sunday.

—Mrs. H. L. Wood and daughter and Miss E. L. Shaw are spending a few weeks at Middlebury and Onset Bay.

—Mr. Edward E. Howard and Mr. M. W.
Sorlinier start Tuesday for a two weeks visit to the World's Fair.

—Mr. H. A. Wilder of Hotel Hunnewell has purchased of Mr. E. W. Converse, Jr., his house on Fairmont avenue, and will occupy it this fall.

—Mrs. Sarah Manzer and Miss Mabel Pay Butler have gone to Fredericksburg, New Brunswick, to spend their vacation.

—The gypsy moth hunters are working on a very extensive scale in Watertown, and the large elm trees that have been thoroughly scraped present a very curious appearance.

—Mr. Mason Stearns and the Misses Stearns departed this morning for Chicago on a visit to the World's Fair.

—Contributions of fruit and flowers for the sick in hospitals in Boston may be left at the Newton station before the hours of 8 and 9 Tuesdays and Fridays, and will be forwarded by the young ladies of the Flower Mission.

—The occupants of Camp Newtonia, which by the way is inhabited by well known gentlemen of Newton, and situated on Lake Medford, Maine, were somewhat startled by a visit they received a few nights since from a huge black bear.
He received a warm reception in the shape of rifle shots, none of which proved fatal, and escaped into the forest.

—The construction train which passes through here every day toward dusk, carrying railroad employees to the hub is becoming a good deal of a nuisance. It runs at a very rapid rate of speed and came tearing past the Newton station a few nights ago running fully a mile a minute.
An outward passenger train was just leaving the depot and passengers walking along the platform, near the inward track, had a narrow escape. The railroad officials ought to put a stop to this wildcat running through the suburbs, especially as there seems to be no argument in favor of such haste.

—Mr. John Phillips died Tuesday evening at the Newton Cottage Hospital. He had been in poor health for the past five years, death resulting finally from cerebbro spinal meningitis. Deceased was 35 years of age and was born in Newton. He received his education in the public schools of this city, and resided here all his life with the exception of a few years passed in the West. For 15 years he had been assisted by Mr. George W. Bush and his father, the late William Phillips, who died only six months ago, in the undertaking business here. He was a man of quiet, domestic habits, very popular with his acquaintances and respected by all who knew him. A widow survives him. The funeral services were held Friday afternoon, at the Newton Cemetery chapel, and Rev. Mr. Hornbrooke will officiate.

SHADY NOOK FARM.

TWO EXCURSIONS.

Newfield, Me., July 31, '93.

In a former issue of the GRAPHIC was printed a letter I sent describing the place, its location, attractions and the proper railroad route to reach here. Since then and during the month of July pleasure seekers have come and gone while others having less restless dispositions have settled down for the summer with the assurance that their stay will be a quiet one and everything done for their comfort and pleasure.

The days are spent much in the same way, persons enjoying themselves according to their taste, some taking long walks or drives, while others find pleasure in fishing and boating on the many ponds in this locality.

The principal event of the day is the arrival of the stage in the early afternoon, bringing the mail and daily papers from Boston and New York. The early part of the week, a letter came to one of the young ladies here postmarked West Newfield, which is the nearest village and postoffice centre.

This proved to be invitations to a lawn party given by the Shon Shone Tribe of Gypsies, or rather by two of the members, assisted by the rest.

These were very tastefully gotten up on birch bark with the seal of the tribe in one corner.

The evening of the party proved to be a rainy one, much to the disappointment of those invited, but the next morning a note came informing us it would be given at night.

Old Prob seemed to be in a good natured mood and favored us with pleasant weather.

We had an early tea and soon after, a party of four, two ladies, a gentleman and myself, left the farm en route for the village, a two mile ride, in pleasant anticipation of an evening's enjoyment.

This ride is considered the pleasantest in the vicinity and the road winds over hill and valley with an ever-changing view of much beauty and attractiveness, particularly to one whose life is spent in the narrow streets of our large cities.

As we ride along we fill our lungs with God's pure air unadulterated by dust and smoke, or the disease germs so often found in the large business centres.

The views are so clear that Mount Washington and the Presidential range can be seen distinctly in the distance ahead of us.

Nearer and to the left of the road is the Ossipee range, while all around us on both sides are well kept farms, with here and there a sheet of water or patch of wood land. As we ride along many jokes are taken and given and so the time passes quickly and pleasantly.

One episode which happens gives us a good deal of amusement.

When about half way over, a young and frolicsome calf, that is feeding by a pair of bars, and near its mother, becoming frightened at our sudden appearance around a curve in the road, starts on ahead of us.

Anyone who has ever had an experience with a calf knows what unmanageable and obstinate critters they are, and no doubt many a profane word has been uttered at their (the calves) expense, which I hope and believe will not be brought up against them at the judgment day. This calf was no exception to the rule, and showed a decidedly strong inclination to have his own way.

We tried in every way to drive it back, but to no purpose, as it kept ahead of us the whole distance, and was lost to our view as we entered the village, going around a distant corner at full speed, with ears and tail in the air.

I hope the owner recovered his property, but have never heard.

Having received a kind invitation from a friend we put our horse in her stable, and then walked on a short distance to the house where the lawn party was to be held. Here we are received by the tribe in their reception costume, consisting of red dresses and the numerous ornaments and trinkets which are indispensable to a Gypsy maiden's wardrobe.

Two estates were used for the occasion, one on each side of the road, and with their ample lawns and shade trees, make a place well adapted for this party.

The guests gathered until the lawns were filled with life and gaiety. We were amused with croquet and other out door games until it became too dark to see, and then gathered around the tent of the fortune teller of the tribe.

She had a large kettle over a fire in which was brewing a magic mixture that would and her to tell the past and reveal the future of her anxious and interested audience. The whole scene was realistic and weird, giving one a feeling that this was a genuine Gypsy camp and not an imitation one. After stirring up this potion in the kettle with a stick and receiving the desired inspiration therefrom, the fortune teller returned to her tent and was ready to ply her vocation among those who wished to have their future revealed. So the evening passed with other games until finally the guests were gathered together under the trees, some in hammocks and rustic seats, while others found a resting place on the broad lawn.

Many lights were interspersed among the trees, giving an artistic effect of light and shade. Here ice cream and cake was provided and near by in the rustic well-house lemonade for those who wished it.

Later there was dancing on the lawn to the piano, and then all gathered near the house and sang a few songs.

This was followed by good night and soon we were on the way home in the moonlight, having spent a pleasant evening.

I had no idea in this vicinity several posters announcing that Barnum's Circus would be at one of the adjoining towns on a certain day and would give two performances one in the afternoon and the other in the evening.

So a few days later a friend proposed that we go over and see the show, and there is a great difference between one held in the city and in a small country town, and I derived more enjoyment and interest from the spectators than from the show itself.

We started in ample season for the afternoon's performance and as the town came into view, teams of all kinds and descriptions were seen driving from all directions toward the group of large white tents which contained the "Great Show on Earth."

We found the town crowded with people as they had come in for miles around to enjoy this entertainment. This is a great day in the country and is looked forward to from year to year.

Hay seed is prevalent and many of the costumes are decidedly odd, and of the style of years gone by. We pay the admission fee and enter the grounds where we soon find ourselves under the tent and among the animals.

In the centre are the elephants, which remind me of the boy's composition in school.

It began as follows: An elephant is an animal with four legs, one at each corner, and a tail at both ends.

I never knew what became of the boy who wrote this, but he undoubtedly grew up into a very smart man.

We walked leisurely around examining the different cages, and then entered the tent where the performance of the afternoon was to be held, in time to secure good seats.

We had some little time to wait, so amused ourselves by watching the people as they came in.

Here was the well-to-do farmer with his wife and daughters all of them dressed in their best. He had on a pair of very new trousers, which were several inches too long for him and a vest and coat of the style of our grandfather's time. This costume was surmounted by a stove pipe hat of flat brim, and tall narrow crown.

The wife and daughters wore hoop skirts and bonnets of ancient date. I hope my readers will not think that all of the audience were dressed like this, because they were not, this family being an exception, and no doubt came many miles to see the circus.

Then there was the young man with his best girl, who probably went home with his pocket book considerably lighter, after the numerous purchases of peanuts, pop corn, candy and other indigestible refreshments.

They seated themselves near us and made many remarks during the show, which soon began and consisted of the usual ring and track performances.

One little incident happened which created a good deal of fun.

A young fellow of gawky appearance came in late and started around the track in search of a seat. Behind him was a clown who had just entered, and who was made up in an exceedingly grotesque manner.

The young man did not see the clown behind him, and presently as one of the animals in the other tent gave an unearthly yell, he glanced around in the direction of the noise, and seeing the clown with his grotesque face, became frightened and started at a head long speed around the ring.

Coming to an opening between the seats he disappeared from view amidst the laughter of those who had been watching him.

At the close of the performance we walked out slowly in the crowd and went into one of the side shows which consisted of several freaks and a female snake charmer.

This latter's exhibition was too much for the nerves of some of the ladies, who screamed and hastily disappeared through the entrance.

We soon left the tent and grounds and drove slowly home arriving in time for a late supper, having spent an enjoyable as well as profitable day.

CANOE TRIP ON THE CHARLES.

A DESCRIPTION OF THE VOYAGE AROUND THE GARDEN CITY.

The Sunday Globe gave an interesting article on a canoe trip from City Point up the Charles and back to the starting point through the waters of the Neponset river. The trip occupied three days and the description of the trip around the city of Newton is given below:

"At Water town the bow of the canoe grazes gently on the bank, and we spring out to stretch our limbs and make the carry. This carrying is at first a novelty, but after several have been struggled with, one wishes that dams were necessary or the spirit of the age were less mercantile and the river might flow on unobstructed.

Jets of red liquid, looking like great heart throbs of life blood, were spouting from the dye works into the river to run out to the sea.

Above the dam the river broadens into a millpond, and we have to face a steady downward current. The growth on the banks change from the stony, sturdy grass of the salt marshes to the more delicate ferns and plants of the fresh water.

Now work begins in earnest, and we bend to our paddles to meet the downward current of the stream, and as the pond grows narrower the trees throw a welcome shade to cool our brows.

The sun is near the meridian, so we pick a spot where nature has spread her soft green carpet and prepare for lunch. Our luncheon is a work of art—delicate egg sandwiches, sliced chicken, cheese and dried ginger to add a little zest. There are no sweets to tempt the digestion and parch the throat. Last, but not least, a glass jar of red claret punch is produced from a tight-fitting felt cover.

After lunch we float gently along, so quietly that we hardly disturbed a mother duck with her brood of little ducks, and the river flows on, calmly aping their elders, splashing and prinking in the sun.

Following up a long trail of soapbuds in the water, we turn a bend and see the rustic constructed huts of some Italian laborers. One of the men sits on the bank doing his weekly wash, pounding the clothes on a flat stone in the water. Probably his ancestors have washed in the same way for generations in sunny Italy.

He smiles at us as we pass, his white teeth contrasting with his olive skin, and altogether making so picturesque an effect that the artist cannot be coaxed by without "doing him."

So far we have met few other boats, but after leaving Waltham we see numerous pleasure crafts of all kinds—row boats, steam launches and canoes.

The stretch from Waltham to Riverside is a popular part of the river for boating. Nature knows no social distinctions, and it is here that we find all sorts and conditions of men, with their sweethearts and wives, seeking health and recreation. On a Sunday or holiday the river is covered with parties of merry picnickers, and the tastefully decorated boats with their gaily costumed occupants make a brilliant and picturesque sight.

On the left bank of the river Norumbega tower stands to commemorate the supposed settlement made here by the Norse, and kindly Prof. Hensford, who erected it in their honor, loved to expatiate on the town, wharves, fish pool and other of which he claimed distinct traces could be found.

We soon reached Riverside and house the canoe for the night in the boat house, returning to Boston via rail healthily tired.

Bright and early the next morning we gently place the canoe in the water and again are mid pastures green. The sun is driving the soft gray mist back from the river, and all the foliage glitters with dew until it looks as though myriads of gems were scattered about for the adornment of the new day.

Birds innumerable flutter from bush to limb and back again, singing each his matins. The swamp blackbird with red epaulettes acts as special police and flutters over our heads, cocking his bright eye from side to side as though to see if he could pass us on ward as harmless. A belated muskrat returning from his amorous wandering swims across our bow, only diving when within a few feet of the boat.

About a mile and a quarter above Riverside the river shallows and the canoe grounds in mid stream.

One of us will have to wade and tow the canoe into deep water, and as there is no necessity for both to wet our feet, we "toss up" to see who shall do it, the loser to carry the other ashore. It falls to the writer, who staggers to the bank with the artist's 210 pounds on his back. The writer slips, and we both sit down in 18 inches of muddy water. We are in a rather damp condition, but sun and air soon dry us off, and we push on for Newton Lower Falls. Here we take out, up a steep embankment, and put the canoe on a carriage made of bicycle wheels, as there is a long carry across the village to escape two dams.

Putting in above the town we pass through a number of picturesque butards where debris of all kind adds to the general air of dilapidation. Then we shake off worn-out civilization and are mid broad fields and woods once more.

The old Coeburne aqueduct crosses the river just above the Falls on a neat and pretty bridge of gray stone, looking trim and new enough, but of no attraction to the artist's eye.

After a steady piddle of a couple of miles, we hear the fall of water over the lower dam at Newton Upper Falls, and taking the canoe around we launch her into the pool above. The pool is as though hewn out of solid rock, forming steep banks, covered on sides and summit with trees that mirror themselves so perfectly in the water, it seems as though one could see another country and sky below.

The Sudbury aqueduct gracefully arches from side to side with a single span. It is called Echo bridge from the echo, which is wonderful, a sharply articulated "hi!" echoing and receding many times, until it elusively dies away into a faint murmur.

Above the bridge at the upper dam the river, fed by the spring freshets, is pouring over and in its effort to reach the lower level churning the water in a snowy froth, and the cool spray blows into our faces as we warily hug the around the edge of the foaming cauldron.

Rather than make a long carry here we drag the canoe almost perpendicularly up the rocks. This operation is gravely watched by a bevy of females who, from their bespectacled countenances, must be Bostonians. They eye with distrust the two characters wandering so "loose and free."

Passing under a stone bridge where the children run to see the graceful little bark shoot through the cool and shadowy arches into the light beyond, we come to shallow water flowing rapidly along a rocky bed. With a steady effort we manage to get through without leaving very much paint on the rocks from the bottom of the boat.

On the banks above we find a limpid spring of clear cool water, and here we rest and eat our lunch.

The artist sketches and spins yarns of other countries and people until the sun beams less fiercely and we go on our way, through long stretches of meadows on either hand.

A gorgeous sunset paints the roofs and spires of Dedham town with gold, making a picture that neither pen nor brush can do justice to. We are too tired to stop to it, and take the train for Boston, ending the second day.

Sure Remedy for the Hard Times.

To the Editor of the GRAPHIC:

Let the nation pay all its indebtedness of every kind, from to day, in greenbacks, legal tender for everything, until with the coin in circulation the volume of currency amounts to $30 to $35 per capita of population, and maintain that ratio by increase of currency, with increase of population and business, and our financial difficulties would cease, never to return so long as that principle of adaptation to the wants of the people should be maintained.

This national currency, every dollar a debt of the nation to the people, would become the standard of value. Nothing else would be thought of when price was asked or paid for anything, including gold and silver, and would be a more even and reliable standard than gold or silver or both, as long as the nation lived.

It would dispose forever of all the bosh about international currency, which would always be as it always has been, gold and silver by weight, as bullion, not as coin, and which would always be at command of the national currency when wanted for any purpose whatever. Coining is simply certifying the weight and fineness of the piece of silver or gold, and should be done for every citizen who brings bullion to the mint and pays a reasonable profitable price to government for coining.

So far as it went into circulation it would so far form a part of the $30 to $35 capita of the volume of currency, with no responsibility of government in relation to it except that the American dollars and fractions should be of one weight and fineness for hundreds of years, which would become known the world over, and would take care of themselves if let alone better than possible for legislators to do.

So far as the United States is concerned, this system of currency would be more perfect than exists in any other nation. Perhaps no foreign nation is sufficiently free from the shackles of the past combined with adequate responsibility of its own to adopt it, but it is just what this country is suffering for and will suffer for until obtained. Increase of currency in the ratio of increase of population and business is the vital thing.

TABACCO HABIT EASILY CURED.

A FEW Testimonials from persons who have been cured by the use of Hill's Tablets.

THE OHIO CHEMICAL CO.:—GENTLEMEN:—I have been using your cure for tobacco habit, and found it would do what you claim for it. I used ten cents worth of the strongest chewing tobacco a day, and from one to five cigars, or I would smoke from ten to forty pipes of tobacco. Have chewed and smoked for twenty-five years, and two packages of your Tablets cured me. I have no desire for it. B. M. JAYLOR, Leslie, Mich.

DONBS FERRY, N. Y.

THE OHIO CHEMICAL CO.:—GENTLEMEN:—Some time ago I sent for $1.00 worth of your Tablets for Tobacco Habit. I received them all right, and although I was both a heavy smoker and chewer, they did the work in less than three days. I am cured. Truly yours, MATTHEW JOHNSON, P. O. Box 45, PITTSBURGH, PA.

THE OHIO CHEMICAL CO.:—GENTLEMEN:—It gives me pleasure to speak a word of praise for your Tablets. My son was strongly addicted to the use of liquor, and through a friend, I was led to try your Tablets. He was a heavy and constant drinker, but after using your Tablets but three days he quit drinking, and will not touch liquor of any kind. I have waited four months before writing you, in order to know the cure was permanent. Yours truly, HELEN MORRISON, CINCINNATI, OHIO.

THE OHIO CHEMICAL CO.:—GENTLEMEN:—Your Tablets have performed a miracle in my case. I have used morphine, hypodermically, for seven years, and have been cured by the use of two packages of your Tablets, and without any effort on my part. W. L. TIMES HAVE CHANGED.

Out of the past he strayed
In silver armor clad,
Wondering but undismayed
To find the world gone mad
And unto hearts aflame
With cruel love of gold
He called in beauty's name
To battle as of old.

Let the dull world pass by,
Nor listened to his cry,
But one who sat alone,
Weary and sick at heart,
Leaned from her desolate throne
High o'er the crowded mart
And sighed: Methinks I hear
A voice still long ago,
The homage dear, so dear!
I nevermore shall know.

But the blind world passed by,
Nor heard the lady's sigh,

A WAR TRAGEDY.

In the mountain regions of Tennessee more than at any other point along the border line between the hostile forces the tragic elements of the civil war were brought close to the people. Elsewhere there were places made vacant by the struggle, other regions suffered more from cannon and the devastation of marching armies, but up in the mountains civilized warfare gave place to the strife of savages, and instead of a war of states there raged battles between neighbors and relatives. A well known citizen of this city recently talking over those times related this story of the passions engendered by guerrilla warfare, which, except for the use of fictitious names, he vouches for as being absolutely true:

When the war broke out, there lived in one of the interior counties of the state a well to do farmer named Jackson. His family consisted of his wife, several sons and a daughter 18 years old. He was an intelligent, upright man, was held in high esteem by his neighbors. His children received a good education, and his daughter, Nellie, was a lovable, gentle girl and the belle of the neighborhood. She was a strong country girl, of a fearless nature, and an expert shot with both the rifle and revolver.

About this time there settled in the country village nearby a young physician from a northern state. Dr. Gordon was an alert, active young man of commanding presence. He soon won the respect of those who became his patients and was meeting with a flattering degree of success in his profession. Among those he attended was Mrs. Jackson, and he of course became acquainted with the daughter. The young people soon manifested a preference for each other's society, and in a short time friendship ripened into love. The parents readily gave their consent to the union, which was to take place as soon as the young physician's practice became lucrative enough to warrant him in marrying. Thanks to his increasing success in his calling, they felt that in a few short months they would start out in life together.

The mutterings of the great struggle which had been going on for two years or more at that time began to grow louder as the scene of conflict drew nearer to this retired part of the country. The wilder and rougher element among the people became members of a guerrilla band which established a reign of terror throughout the surrounding country. The property of those who were suspected of sympathizing with the Union was destroyed, their cattle and horses stolen, their buildings burned to the ground, and the men warned to join the southern army at once on pain of death.

Dr. Gordon was known as an outspoken Union man, and he received notice time and again that his life would be forfeited if he did not enlist in the cause of the south, but he went on his way undaunted. One day while calling upon a patient who lived some distance beyond Mr. Jackson's he was arrested by a squad of Confederate soldiers in command of a lieutenant, who at once started for the camp with their prisoner. They had to pass the Jackson place on their way and stopped for supper, which was readily served for them. Mr. Jackson called the lieutenant in command to one side and told him that the prisoner was soon to become his son-in-law and asked for his release, promising him that the doctor would take no part in the war, but would leave the country within 24 hours and would not return until the conflict had ended.

After a little hesitation the officer consented, for he was a near neighbor and knew that Mr. Jackson was to be trusted, and besides he himself was under deep obligations to the prisoner, who had been his family physician for some time. Dr. Gordon was informed that he could have 24 hours in which to leave the state. For the sake of his promised wife, who was present and added her tearful entreaties to the requests of her father, he consented to go. The Confederates departed when they had finished their meal, and after an hour or two spent in forming his plans for departure the doctor bade his sweetheart farewell and went to his boarding place. He at once began his preparations for departure.

He had just given the last instructions to his host and was about bidding the family farewell when there came a knock at the door, and in walked three of the most noted guerrillas of the band that infested the neighborhood. They were aware of the doctor's arrest and parole on condition of his leaving the place. They appeared friendly and stated that their errand was to get some medicine from the doctor for the child of one of their number. As the unsuspecting physician turned to get his medicine case from the table three revolvers were drawn, and their reports rang out simultaneously.

Every shot took effect in the doctor's body, but no vital spot was touched. He wheeled and ran from the room, followed by another fusillade from the desperadoes. Running around the house the wounded man made his way cautiously in again at the back door, crept up stairs to his room and crawled upon his bed. Here he was found shortly after by one of the members of the family, who went for a physician, leaving the sufferer alone.

The three murderers, who had been searching for their victim, entered the room while the house was empty. One of them walked up to the side of the bed, and placing his revolver against his victim's temple blew his brains out. Word of the tragedy was sent to the Jacksons. Mr. Jackson and Nellie, who would not be left behind, came at once to the bedside of the murdered man. Throwing herself upon the form of her lifeless lover, Nellie clasped her arms around it and gave way to a torrent of tears. After the first outburst she rose, drying her eyes. Then deliberately laying her hand upon the heart of the dead man and looking upward, she said distinctly and calmly:

"Here, over the body of my murdered love I swear not to rest until I have wreaked my revenge upon the three cowards who have taken his life. I will have their miserable lives in payment for my blighted life. I call upon all present to witness my oath. God help me to fulfill it."

The body of the physician was buried, and then Nellie at once set about carrying out her oath of vengeance. Two of the guerrillas lost their lives in a clash with the Federal troops before she had an opportunity of reaching them, much to her sorrow, for she felt that she had been cheated out of a part of her mission. The third one, and the one who had fired the last shot into the doctor's head, took good care to keep out of her way. Under cover of night he came stealing back home at last on a visit.

The next day Nellie, who was unaware of his return, rode over to his house, some two miles and a half from her home, thinking perhaps she could learn something of his whereabouts. Finding no one at home, she sat down to await the return of some member of the family. While waiting a man came to the door and inquired if the man she was waiting for was in, saying he heard he had returned the night before and he wished to see him. Upon Nellie's informing him of the absence of the family, he said he thought they must have gone over to the house of the man's sister-in-law, who lived about half a mile beyond, and that he would go over and see. After he had been gone a short time, Nellie mounted her horse and followed him, fearing that he would give warning to the object of her search. On the way she carefully inspected her revolver to make sure it was in good condition.

Arriving at the house, she found a number of people gathered there, among them the wife, father and mother of the man she sought. They nearly all rose to go as she entered. Not seeing the one she was after, she inquired if he was there and was told that he was not. Glancing toward the gate, she saw him slinking stealthily toward it, trying to escape her notice. Running out quickly, she came up within a short distance of him and called upon him to stop. He turned with an oath, but seeing a revolver pointed at him wheeled and started to run.

Nellie fired at a distance of 12 paces, the shot taking effect in the back of his head. Before he fell she fired again, and he fell upon his face and knees. Three more shots were fired at a distance of five paces, two of which struck him in the back and side. Then walking coolly up to her victim's side she watched till his struggles ceased and he lay dead. She then turned and walked deliberately toward the house, but before reaching it met the wife of her victim, who came rushing out demanding why Nellie had shot her husband. Drawing herself up proudly, Nellie answered:

"You know what that man did on Dec. 13. He brutally murdered my promised husband. I have been determined to do this deed ever since, and I never shall regret it."

They threatened her with vengeance for her act, but paying no heed to them she reloaded her revolver and mounting her horse she turned and said:

"If the cowardly band wish to add to their infamy by murdering a woman, I suppose they will do so. Death would be welcome to me now that my beloved is avenged. I shall stay at home or leave, as I please, undismayed by any threats you may make." Then she departed unmolested. —New York Tribune.

Horses With Four White Feet.

In France, and I believe in European countries, it is a most ominous sign for a rider, and especially a soldier, to want a horse with four white feet. The famous general, Lasalle, who was very superstitious upon this point, never knowingly mounted such a horse. The day of his death, after several ominous events which had happened to him that day, such as a broken mirror, a broken pipe, the picture of his wife broken at the very moment when he went to look at it for the last time, he mounted a horse not his own without glancing at the feet. The horse had the unlucky signs. Mounted upon this horse, he was struck by a shot fired at a moment when fighting had ceased by a Croat among the prisoners just taken at the battle of Wagram.

On the other hand, these four white feet are a mark and token of consideration with the orientals, who do not fail to mention the fact in the pedigrees of their horses. —L'Artiste.

Nurses' Weakness For Tea.

A paying patient in a London hospital, while bearing testimony to the kindness, attention and self denial of the nurses, remarks on the one weakness they all appear to possess. And this is intemperance—not indeed in alcoholic liquors, but in tea. In season and out of season, morning, noon and night, was the cup of tea resorted to. It seemed to be quite as much the correct thing when two nurses met for one to invite the other to come and have a cup of tea as in some circles it is for a city clerk to invite his friend to come and have a drink. This excessive tea drinking is no doubt due to the long hours and harassing work of the nurses

EYEBROW AND NOSE.

How Character May Be Studied From Features of the Face.

The "rainbow of peace," as the eyebrow has been called, and the eyelids are treated of at considerable length as being among the most expressive, animated and mobile features of the face. In fact, to highly intelligent people, one is almost forced to think that a person possessed of nothing else but a pair of symmetrical eyebrows could easily express his desires or his emotions, no matter how complicated these might be. Highly arched brows are said to denote vivacity and brilliancy, but not the power of profundity. The line allied to the more level kind. Regularly curved eyebrows are said to express cheerfulness; square, deep thought; irregular, field, ass, versatility, excitability; raised at the inner corner, melancholy; joined over the nose, an unsettled mind.

Andamantus likened individuals with thick eyebrows which met over the root of the nose to swine. This might by some be considered actionable, but these would do well to remember that Andamantus is no more. Thick and bushy eyebrows are supposed to denote strength and energy on the part of their possessors, while the contrary development indicates delicacy, refinement or merely weakness, which is hardly a satisfying diagnosis. A lack of eyebrows is not considered a sign of mental strength. The eyebrows and the eyelids are on terms of close intimacy, and the form of the former is connected with the opening of the latter. Only in the romantic novel are black eyes to be found. By those who have studied the question deeply four primary shades of color are recognized. These are brown, green, blue and gray, and each of these has five tones.

It is considered a somewhat singular fact that the rarest of all noses is that found in the middle of the face, and taking 100 noses at random one will not find on an average more than three in which the bridge of the nose descends perpendicularly from a straight line drawn exactly between the eyes. A well proportioned nose, according to most authorities, should take up one-third of the profile, measured from the commencement of the hair to the tip of the chin. Napoleon used to say that a long nose meant a long head; therefore the longest headed club in London should have been that whose members were elected for the length of their noses, the chairman having the longest nose and the hall porter none. A long nose is generally considered the mental superior of a short one.

Hogarth classified noses as angular, aquiline or Roman, parrot beak, bulbous or bottle, straight or Grecian, turned up and snub. Other kinds, which may be added or not according to taste, are mixed and broken. An unduly red nose does not necessarily indicate that the wearer is a toper. It may be due to tight lacing, indigestion or emotionality of temperament. There are also other ways of explaining the trouble. The smile is purely human, as brutes are unable to elevate or depress the corners of the mouth as a means of expression. As is the case with almost every other feature of the face, physiognomists are found who claim that the lips are of all features the most susceptible of action; and the most direct indices of the feelings. These champions of the mouth maintain that every shade of feeling can be described by the lips with more facility than by any other feature. —Fall Mall Budget.

After Due Consideration.

In Illinois there is an old law on the statute books to the effect that in criminal cases the jury is "judge of the law as well as the facts." Though not often quoted, once in awhile a lawyer with a desperate case makes use of it. In one case the judge instructed the jury that it was to judge the law as well as the facts, but added that it was not to judge of the law unless it was fully satisfied that it knew more law than the judge. An outrageous verdict was brought in, contrary to all instructions of the court, who felt called upon to rebuke the jury. At last one old farmer arose.

"Judge," said he, "weren't we to judge the law as well as the facts?"

"Certainly," was the response, "but I told you not to judge the law unless you were clearly satisfied that you knew the law better than I did."

"Well, judge," answered the farmer as he shifted his quid, "we considered that point." —San Francisco Argonaut.

One Woman's Courage.

A story is going the rounds of a little woman who was seated behind a gorgeously dressed beauty at a theater in the metropolis whose balloon sleeves completely hid the stage from the victim in the rear. She sat on first one foot, then the other, but in vain; no glimpse of the play could she get. After a whispered conversation with her husband came the tragedy. Without a word of warning that wee woman quietly rose, gently but firmly laid her hands upon the winged shoulders of her obtrusive neighbor and pressed her green and red ruffles as far down as they would go. People who saw the operation gasped at the transformation. The victim wisely accepted the situation and remained in subjugation until the "Prodigal Daughter" ignominiously returned to the fattened calf. —New York Recorder.

How Some Girls Walk.

Some girls walk gracefully. They make "good time" over the pavement, but their movements are not abrupt nor awkward. There is no apparent effort in their locomotion. Some girls are now affecting a man's stride. The imitation is a ludicrous failure. Other girls are trying an odd kind of turn of the shoulders that gives to their appearance a top wobble and a lower swing. —Exchange.

RIVERSIDE IMPROVEMENT.

THE B. & A. TO BUILD A NEW DEPOT AND BRIDGE.

It is now only a question of a short time when the Boston & Albany railroad will have a four-track line between Boston and Wellesley, and ere long to South Framingham. The four-track equipment at present extends only to Riverside, but within the past few months the preparatory work for foundations for two more tracks from that point to Wellesley has been progressing rapidly. It has been necessary to cut through sections of solid ledge along the line, and on that account an unusual amount of time has been consumed in clearing, leveling and getting the roadbed into shape to begin the work of laying the rails.

In connection with the four-track project, a great deal has been done in the way of straightening bad curves and abolishing grade crossings. Between Riverside and South Framingham the road has not only been straightened, but changes have been made in the grades to secure a more level roadbed, the principal object being to facilitate rapid transit.

At Wellesley a big curve has been avoided by the straightening process and just now important improvements are under way at Riverside, where the circuit and Newton Lower Falls branches diverge from the main line, the first on a sharp curve skirting an immense bluff and the latter on a more easy angle, starting from the main line just beyond the trestle bridge over the Charles river. The bridge is approached on both sides by sharp curves and is only of sufficient width for two tracks. It forms the direct main line connection, beside providing the only means of connection with the Lower Falls branch. Through trains crossing the bridge necessarily slow up, in part because of the curves on either side, and also on the account of the increased number of trains running through Riverside since the advent of the circuit branch, utilizing the main line tracks between Riverside and Boston.

These conditions have proved an obstacle to rapid transit, and the construction of a new and larger bridge seemed to be the only way out of the difficulty. It was also necessary for the continuance of the four-track line to Wellesley.

The new bridge will cross the river at an elevation of 39 feet, nine feet higher than the present structure. It will consist of one heavy trestle-work span, 90 feet long, supported by solid masonry buttresses. The western abutment is finished and the other on the opposite side of the river will be completed during the present month. The abutments, or buttresses, are constructed of two feet by four feet granite blocks, laid in double rows and extending back from the river about 45 feet. The intervening space between the retaining walls is filled with rocks and gravel, the whole forming a very solid and substantial support.

It is planned to elevate the present road bed between Riverside and Wellesley nine feet, thereby doing away with a 30-foot grade. Between Natick and Lake crossing the roadbed will be elevated about four feet, and another grade in that way disposed of. With these changes and previous improvements, it is expected that the running time of fast trains between Boston and New York will be decreased and the general service improved. More trains can be run on the circuit branch and over the main line to South Framingham, with less danger of interfering with the through trains and the immense freight business, which requires an extensive transportation service.

The elevation of the tracks through Riverside is thought of as a means of rid of the grade crossings in Newton by raising the tracks. In fact, it is known that a plan was prepared by the Boston & Albany railroad engineers providing for an elevated roadbed for four tracks from Faneuil to the Auburn street bridge at Auburndale. The idea was to raise the tracks about 14 feet at the highest point by means of a gravel embankment, sloped off gradually at the sides and turfed. The same idea will be carried out in the Riverside improvement, except near the station, where it will be necessary to construct stone retaining walls. Charles street, which now crosses the tracks at grade, will be carried under the new elevated structure. The plan is to arch the street, giving 10 feet in the clear. The arch will be of solid masonry, and wide enough for the laying out of a 40-foot street.

The present small, wooden station at Riverside is to be replaced by a new stone structure of attractive design, with wide porches extending over the platform. The dimensions of the building will be 60x35, and the materials used in its construction, pink granite with brown trimmings.

The entire work at Riverside will be completed within a few weeks. It involves a large outlay of money, for no expense has been spared, evidently, to make every detail of the improvement as perfect as possible. The point of greatest safety for passengers has been considered and with added conveniences the large number of people who visit Riverside during the summer months coming from Boston and many of its suburbs, will be gratified to learn that the dangerous approaches utilized for years by the devotees of boating and canoeing on their journey to and from the boat houses along the banks of the Charles river will soon be a thing of the past.

Deafness Cannot be Cured

by local applications, as they cannot reach the diseased portion of the ear. There is only one way to cure Deafness, and that is by constitutional remedies. Deafness is caused by an inflammation of the mucous lining of the Eustachian Tube. When this tube gets inflamed you have a rumbling sound or imperfect hearing, and when it is entirely closed Deafness is the result, and unless the inflammation can be taken out and this tube restored to its normal condition, hearing will be destroyed forever; nine cases out of ten are caused by catarrh, which is nothing but an inflamed condition of the mucous surfaces.

We will give One Hundred Dollars for any case of Deafness (caused by catarrh) that cannot be cured by Hall's Catarrh Cure. Send for circulars, free.

THE BOULEVARD ORDER.

The Mayor has signed the order for laying out the Boulevard, also the order authorizing agreements with abutters relative to location and assessment of betterments. The agreement have been filed in the office of the City Clerk, executed by the abutters, in which the limit of time required of the City for Construction as a condition for the gift of land in lieu of betterment and money in part payment for construction, is wholly stricken out. No agreement on the part of the city will be executed until any possible legal objections which it is understood will be made to the laying out of the Boulevard have been determined.

In another column, Alderman Bothfeld has a letter, correcting a misapprehension which some have, in regard to the condition of the boulevard order, and its passage by the aldermen. The matter was referred to last week, but many readers mixed up the terms City Council, and Common Council, and so got a wrong impression. The success of the boulevard is assured, which is the main thing, and its building can be begun as soon as the financial conditions are favorable. It will be seen by Alderman Bothfeld's letter that the interests of the city have been carefully protected.

JUDGING from the reports in the daily papers the girls of the Waltham Watch Factory are proving themselves worthy of their American ancestry, by their readiness in providing for themselves while the factory is shut down. They find plenty of resources, in the true American style, and are accepting positions to do general housework, to take care of children, to nurse invalids, and in fact, are willing to do any honest work that offers. The demand for general housework girls is always greater than the supply, and although the hours are longer than at a factory, the pay is as good or better, and a capable girl is sure of finding a pleasant home. The genuine Yankee, man or woman, never finds himself at a loss in any crisis that may overtake him. When one occupation fails, he has a half dozen other trades to fall back upon, and can bring success out of the most discouraging surroundings. The modern theory that to be successful one must devote all his energies to doing one thing well is not in accord with the Yankee character; he can do a dozen things well.

PEOPLE who have money to loan can get six per cent for it by visiting the City Treasurer at West Newton. This week a number of thousand dollars have been left with him, in sums varying from $100 to $5,000, on four and six months time, and the city will need many thousands more in anticipation of the taxes. In other cities advertisements have been published notifying all who have money to loan that the city would take a certain amount and this may be done later, when the money is required. It is a good chance to secure six per cent interest, and to put the money in a perfectly safe place and Newton citizens might as well secure the advantage of this as outsiders. While the financial stringency lasts, the usual method of securing money at a low rate is not available, so that the money needed must be raised in other ways.

SOME of the papers gave the Common Council credit for shrewd business judgment in not passing the boulevard loan order, because of the difficulty of placing bonds just at present. But the order was tabled simply because of the absence of some who favored it, and on that account it would not have received the necessary two-thirds vote. The aldermen were all present and so finished up their work, and as there is no time limit, they passed the order so that when the market gets in better condition the city would be in a position to take advantage of it and begin the work. The order will be passed by the other branch as soon as the short vacation is over, and by that time it is expected that business will be in a much better condition.

THOMAS DOLAN, the great manufacturer of Philadelphia, who is a strong republican, says some things in an interview in the Philadelphia Inquirer that deserve wide reading:—

It appears to me that it is entirely wrong for the republicans to keep harping away upon the same old campaign tactics. The democrats have fully three years in which to right matters, and if the republicans insist that the present depression is due to fear regarding the tariff, when business becomes brighter the democrats will claim all of the credit and assert that better times are due to whatever changes in the tariff laws they may have enacted. The country is just as rich as it was six months ago. The harvests are bountiful, the needs of consumers are just as great, and as soon as Congress enacts the proper laws I look for a complete restoration of confidence which will cause the tide of prosperity again to sweep over the land. Congress is not to legislate alone for democrats of republicans, but for the entire people, and with the full comprehension that it is the American people will right the wrong. The welfare of the country rests with the people, and there is no occasion for us to lose confidence in ourselves.

THE commission houses report an active demand from small investors for stocks, which is a very encouraging feature of the situation, and investors have certainly a chance to secure good paying securities at bottom prices. The transfer books of the large corporations are said to reflect the extent of the demand from the small investors, and this fact certainly shows that there is plenty of money in the country, and that there is a good deal of confidence among the people. Speculative business may be in bad shape, but that is not a great misfortune for the country as the real situation depends upon the people who buy for a permanent investment.

PRESIDENT CLEVELAND's message on the silver question appears to have given general satisfaction to those who are more interested in the welfare of the country than in their own political party, or their private schemes. The message is a clear and statesmanlike document, and puts the whole matter plainly before Congress and before the people. There is no difficulty in understanding the issue after such a presentation and if the sound money men of all parties in Congress unite, they can repeal the Sherman law in short order and relieve the country from the dangerous condition of things it has brought about.

MAYOR BANCROFT of Cambridge has vetoed the order granting the West End electric road a location for its wires and poles on Brattle street as he believes that this fine old street should be reserved as a connecting link in the new park system, and the car tracks removed altogether. Brattle street is too narrow for electric cars, he says, and the public interest would be better served by having the electric road on Mount Auburn street, which is wider, and does not contain so many beautiful and historic residences. Mayor Bancroft's veto will be generally commended, even if it does put off for a few months the completion of an electric road in Newton.

EX-CONGRESSMAN WHITING of Holyoke says that he does not approve of the modern fashion of organizing a regular contest for a nomination, and therefore he does not care to be considered a candidate for governor. The friends of Attorney General Pillsbury have made a very careful organization and are conducting the contest with a good deal of shrewdness. Political prizes don't go nowadays to the man who sits down and waits for honors, but to the one whose friends do the most hustling. At present all the chances seem to be in favor of Mr. Pillsbury.

THE papers are making a good deal of fun of George Gould for saying that the times were so hard he could not raise ten millions of money in three days, if he was called on to do so. The young man does not get much sympathy, and he had the bad taste to add that it was all because of the attacks by legislatures on rich men and corporations. If the legislatures had not been so easily manipulated George Gould and his class would not have made so many millions from the wrecking of railroads and other doings of like nature.

EX-CONGRESSMAN JOHN E. RUSSELL has returned from Europe and says he is in favor of nominating Mayor Matthews of Boston for governor. The influential Democrats seem united in favor of Matthews, who is said to be very unwilling to run, having other plans in view. Just at present, Mayor Matthews is in the hospital, suffering from the effects of a fall from a horse he was riding, but his injuries are fortunately not of a serious nature.

SUNDAY's storm will cost the city $3,000 in the way of repairs to highways that have been washed out. $1,500 has just been expended in repairing the damage done by the storm of some three weeks ago. These sums, added to the $5,000 expended by the unusual number of snow storms last winter represent extra expenses of the highway department, which were not provided for in the estimates.

THE Italians working on the sewers have been discharged and their places filled, or offered to citizens of Newton. It is proper that the laborers of Newton should be given the preference, as the Italians are merely birds of passage, and the money they earn is not expended here. The city authorities are deserving of credit for the position they have taken.

UNDER suggestions from the Mayor the police are keeping a sharp lookout for tramps. Several were gathered in last week and accommodated with lodging at police headquarters, and in the morning commanded to move on. No tramps should be allowed to loiter about Newton, and it is a good plan to look after them sharply.

THE Boston & Albany's annual report does not give any evidence of hard times, as its gross earnings have been over ten millions, the largest sum in the history of the road, while over seven millions have been expended, a greater sum than in any previous year.

Tremont Theatre.

The pleasing American opera, "Puritania," which was originally performed at the Tremont Theatre, Boston, last season by the Pauline Hall Opera Company, has again been received with approval by patrons of the beautiful house, and the brief revival of two weeks has attracted large audiences. This week Miss Hall and her company will be seen for the last time in the charming musical work, Manager McLellan having arranged with Abbey Schofield and Grau to produce on Monday, Aug. 14, for the first time in Boston since 1881, the French opera comique, "Mme. F. var," in which Miss Hall will assume the title role and impersonate seven characters during the action of the opera. Miss Hall will wear feminine costumes for the first time this season as Mme. Favart, her previous role having been those of the cavalier. She will also introduce the famous "Tic-Tac" song, which she originally sang at the Bijou Theatre, New York, several years ago. The fascinating young dancer, Miss Dorothy Denning, will appear in her beautiful rainbow dance at every performance.

The Boulevard Order.

Newton, Aug. 10, 1893.

To the Editor of the GRAPHIC:—
In an editorial in your last issue it is intimated that the Common Council tabled the orders for the issuing and sale of boulevard bonds because of the present money panic. As the board of aldermen unanimously passed these orders, the inference is that the upper branch failed in re-issuing ordinary business prudence. I find some citizens, not knowing the facts, have taken this view. The city has secured the waiving of a time limit on the part of the contributors of land and money, and holds the required releases and agreements (duly executed so far as the individuals are concerned) subject to its own pleasure as to time of executing the same. Thus the matter is quite one sided, the city holding all privileges.

The mere pass of, at the present time, of orders for the issuing and for the sale of bonds, means nothing more than giving the treasurer authority to prepare such bonds and to place them when opportunity and circumstances warrant so doing.

Work on the boulevard will possibly not be begun for months, but it, as now seems probable, cheap money and unemployed labor are the early results of the present stringency, the work can be undertaken under the most favorable conditions.

In view of these facts, the Common Council tabled the bond orders for no other reason than not having the required two-thirds vote to pass them.

The orders for the laying out, etc., etc., were promptly passed in concurrence, requiring only a majority vote.

As the matter is of public interest and in justice to the board of aldermen, it seems proper that the statement should be made.

Respectfully,
H. E. BOTHFELD.

Work that Pays.

To the Editor of the GRAPHIC:—

Having a few apple trees and heeding your advice last spring as regards each one doing something towards destroying the tent caterpillars which are so destructive to the orchards. I commenced to battle with them as soon as they made their appearance, using kerosene oil but no torches, and by watching them from day to day, in a few weeks I was the victor. The result was beneficial, as I now have quite a crop of good apples, besides good clean shade trees; while some of my neighbors who did not do much to eradicate them had their trees stripped of all the blossoms as well as the leaves, consequently no fruit, so I think with you that it pays to fight them.

—Mr. A. F. York died at the residence of his daughter, Mrs. W. A. Young, early yesterday morning. Death resulted from Bright's disease. Deceased was 67 years of age.

—Mr. D. P. Goslin has the sympathy of many friends in the loss he has sustained by the death of his youngest child, aged 5 months. The body was taken to Farningdale, N. E., for interment.

—Mr. Edward Ryan, the venerable father of Sgt. Ryan, is 100 years of age. His health is remarkably good and he wears his years remarkably well.

—Mrs. Sila Stone celebrated her 57th birthday last Saturday. She received informally at her home on Watertown street, and among her guests were several persons who had passed the point of four score years.

—Frank Farron, 11 years of age, residing on Auburn street, fell from a tree on Auburn street yesterday morning, fracturing his left arm. He was attended by a physician and later taken to his home.

—It is stated at the City Hall that the tax rate and valuation of the city will not be declared until Sept. 1. Several causes have combined to delay the assessors in their work and the announcement of the result will be later than ever before. It is thought that the rate will be higher than last year, in part because of the large outlays for improvements.

—Mr. Allen Price of South Natick was driving on Washington street last evening, and when just below the Woodland Park Hotel, collided with a wagon driven by an unknown man. Mr. Price's buggy was almost completely demolished and he was thrown out. His left shoulder was dislocated and he will be laid up several days from that and other injuries. The unknown party, who was responsible for the accident, whipped up his horse and drove on without stopping to ascertain the result of the collision.

—Mr. A. W. Gilmore's box buggy was badly demolished Tuesday evening, the result of a runaway accident. The horse became frightened near the junction of Crafts and California streets, by a bicyclist whose wheel ran so close to the vehicle that a collision was narrowly avoided, and dashed through the former highway down Washington and through Newtonville square to Bowers street where the exhausted animal came to a standstill. The occupants of the buggy, Mr. and Mrs. James Sexton, were thrown out, but not seriously injured.

—Mr. W. H. Rand has returned from a very pleasant driving trip around Lake Winnepesaukee. There were eight in the party, Mr. and Mrs. Rand and daughter, Miss Rand, and Mr. and Mrs. C. E. Rand and son of Newton Highlands. The party had Mr. Furbush's new four-wheeled buckboard, and a team of horses, and took a tent along so that they could camp out if they found a desirable spot when night came. They took the trip leisurely, stopping wherever the fancy took them. They were gone three weeks and are very enthusiastic over this method of taking a vacation.

Women In Siam.

To a European eye the good looks, if they anywhere exist, of both men and women in Siam are irremediably destroyed by the universal use of the betel, which blackens and corrodes the teeth and causes them to protrude, which renders the spittoon an indispensable article of furniture and is responsible for the great splashes of red saliva that may be seen everywhere adorning the ground as they have been ejected from the mouths of passersby.

Like their fellows in Anam, the Siamese women enjoy great freedom and influence. Being of a most mercantile and managing temperament, they become the self constituted stewesses, treasurers and hucksters of the home or shop or store. They may be seen by the hundred going to market, each seated alone in her own canoe, with her wares spread out before her.

The last king kept a bodyguard of amazons, with red coats and trousers and small carbines, but the present sovereign has converted them into a species of interior palace police. The national character is docile, indolent, light hearted, gay.—Fortnightly Review.

Why the Guests Abstained.

Bishop Utterson's mother was a remarkable woman and inherited much of the vivacity of her father. When she and her husband were at Gibraltar during the peninsular war, the latter was known to be particular about his shaving water. From his friend, the Spanish governor of Algieras, he received the sympathetic present of some dozens of rainwater in bottles, which the butler, thinking it to be wine, duly took charge of.

Some time afterward the colonel gave a dinner party, but at the last moment was called off by official duty, and a brother officer was asked to take his place at the table. In due course the hock was handed round, but it was observed that the guests were singularly abstemious in regard to it. The explanation was discovered when they had departed. The well stored and savory shaving water had been supplied for hock!—Notes and Queries.

Origin of the Red Cap of Liberty.

The red cap of liberty had a very prosaic origin. Instead of being the "Phrygian bonnet" it is just the galley slave's headgear. The Swiss of the Chateaux regiment sent to the galleys for their share in the Nancy riots were released and came into Paris with the red caps still on their heads. "They are the victims of despotism," said the people, forgetting the circumstances of the riot, and so the red cap became the favorite with the extreme party.—Washington Star.

A Proud Ex-Minister.

I saw Andy Leavitt, the ex-minister, the other day. The old man is chatty as ever. He loves to think and talk about his patriotic ancestry.

"My great-grandfather," said he, "was one of the men who fought the redcoats at the battle of Bunker Hill. Further than that I can't trace him, but he made a good beginning, and I am proud to know that my blood flowed in the veins of one of the soldiers at Bunker Hill."—Boston Globe.

Married Over Sixty Years.

John Ewing and wife of Warwick, Chester county, have been wedded 65 years; William W. Rhoads and wife of Potstown were married Nov. 29, 1829, nearly 64 years ago, and David Wells and wife of North Coventry, Chester county, were married March 30, 1830, over 63 years since.—Cor. Philadelphia Ledger.

A Substitute For Leather.

Leather possesses such excellent qualities for the many purposes to which it is put that it would seem idle to seek a substitute. Nevertheless, there are many persons who, while they find that leather serves as an effective protective covering for the foot, find also that it is often obstinate in adapting itself to the requirements of individual feet or to the more or less physical abnormalities to which so many are subject. In such cases, if comfort is to be expected, only the most supple and yielding quality should be worn. At the same time, of course, it should be waterproof and durable. These qualities, so far as we have been able to judge, belong in a satisfactory degree to an interesting and new material called "flexus fibra." It appears to be a flax derived material, suitably prepared and oiled, so that to all appearance it is leather. It is particularly supple and flexible and takes a polish equally well with the best kinds of calf.

We have recently had occasion to wear a boot of which the "vamp" or cut front section consists entirely of flexus fibra and have purposely submitted it to somewhat undue strain, in spite of which no cracking of the material was perceived, while the sense of comfort to the foot was very evident. Flexus fibra, being a material of vegetable origin, is calculated also to facilitate free ventilation and thereby to obviate the discomfort arising from what is called "drawing" the feet.—London Lancet.

The Benefit of Work.

Though we all welcome a season of rest, yet if we were never to have anything in the way of regular duties to perform what a purposeless, worrying existence ours would become! The cricket sporting itself gayly through the summer hours thinks that no life can be as pleasant or as sweet as its happy go lucky improvident hours of idleness spent under blue skies and in the full glare of the glorious sunlight, yet when winter comes and the lack of thought for the morrow has proved disastrous, then it wishes that there had been less play and more serious employment that would have brought about more worthy results.

Outside of the worldly benefit that accrues from conscientious work, there are other advantages that few realize unless they have experienced them for themselves. The blues speed away before its helpful influence, time never drags, the edge of sorrow is made less keen, and a healthier mind and body stand forth as examples of the benefit to be derived from having something to do beyond idle gossiping, desultory fancy work or a round of dressing and dancing that may seem blissful in contemplation, but is in reality not one-half as satisfying as the discharge of regular duties that make one feel that one has accomplished something worth talking about.—Philadelphia Times.

Literary Veterans.

Every one knows what the tontine system of life insurance is. A number of people pay equal sums of money into a pool, the amount is put out at interest, and the surviving subscriber takes the accumulated sum. Similarly every man of letters gradually comes to be joint owner with other persons of a mass of valuable literary material which cannot be used by any of the joint owners so long as the others survive. But if he outlives the rest it all becomes his, and he can do what he will with it, without fear of hurting any one's feelings or disclosing anything that would work injury to the living or to the memory of the dead. Who is there that writes and is still under 50 who will not admit that the stories he knows the best and are the best worth telling are those that he cannot tell because of the score of people still on earth who would strip the disguises from his characters and read as biography what he designed to have pass as fiction? Which of us does not think he might do a magnum opus if there were no lives in being to hinder?—Scribner's.

Rare Books, Not Old Ones, Are Valuable.

Age only gives value to comparatively few books. Hundreds of volumes printed in the seventeenth century are to be had at our secondhand shops at prices ranging from 10 to 25 cents apiece, and the average vellum of 350 years ago is worth 80 per cent less in the market today than is one of Hawthorne's or of Whittier's cunning little first editions printed between 1838 and 1842. Going over an English catalogue a few days ago, we made a note of the prices of items bearing dates from 1490 to 1510 and found that the 16 volumes offered for sale could be had for $5.92, about 35 cents apiece. Not long ago, here in Chicago, a 24 volume edition of Melancthon printed in Amsterdam in 1660 was sold to the Armour Institute library for $5. By actual weight and by actual measurement (for they were monstrous folios in double thick vellum) they were cheaper than coal by the ton or wood by the cord.—Chicago Record.

If the Atlantic's Bed Were Raised.

An elevation of the seabed 100 fathoms would suffice to lay bare the greatest part of the North sea and join England to Denmark, Holland, Belgium and France. A deep channel of water would run down the west coast of Norway, and with this a majority of the fiords would be connected. A great part of the bay of Biscay would disappear, but Spain and Portugal are but little removed from the Atlantic depression. The 100 fathom line approaches very near the west coast, and soundings of 1,000 fathoms can be made within 20 miles of Cape St. Vincent, and much greater depths have been sounded at distances but little greater than this from the western shores of the Iberian peninsula.—Nautical Magazine.

PROGRESSIVE LOVE.

I remember fair Florence, my very first love,
And all that I told her was true, every word,
But my love was as swift as the wings of a dove,
And ere she loved me in the distance I heard
The sweet voice of dear Blanche—she was best
Of them all,
And I keep her blent memory fresh in my heart.
But the roses of summer must fade in the fall,
As the night follows day, so we met but to part.
Then Emma and Isabelle, Mary and Mame,
Each in turn were loved lightly, and Agnes and May.
My song every summer would bear a new name,
But these, like the others, soon drifted away.
And then came a season of sadness for me,
A season in which I tried hard to forget
The marvelous musical voice of Marie,
And the faraway, oceanlike eyes of Lizette.
Even as the gay candle fly flirts with the flame
I played round the hearts of the maidens I knew.
My song every season would have a new name,
And others would fade from my mind like the dew.
Now I look at the past as 'twere all in a mist,
For my bosom's own queen is enthroned on my knee.
I remember one name, one alone in the list,
As I gaze in the beautiful eyes of Marie,
—Cy Warman in New York Sun.

A VILLAGE KISS.

Jacqueline was a young country girl, who was 16 years old last apple harvest,
and was a veritable model of sincerity.
Every one who knew her loved her. Her skin was as white as the field daisy and as brilliant as the corn poppy.
On market days Jacqueline mounted her donkey, laden with fresh vegetables, the appetizing products of her mother's kitchen garden, and went to sell them in Blois. When she appeared in the square, every one welcomed her. Her eyes were so innocent, her voice so engaging that every one was attracted by her. Her carrots seemed better than her neighbors', her potatoes had not the least scar upon them, and her crisp lettuce or cresses from the brook, looking as fresh as herself, were quickly bought and at the highest price.
I ought not to forget to tell you that Jacqueline had no lovers.
At the village festival she made the old dance till they named her the daughter of miracles. Protected by the purity of her thoughts, she kept the young men at such a distance that they dared not even so much as press her finger tips in sign of friendship. Jacqueline had a friend in Blois who was going to marry one of the village boys. Suzanne was her name, and she was two years older than Jacqueline.
She was pretty, but coquettish; attractive, but capricious. She had made her lover miserable by her changing and fanciful moods.
One day Jacqueline was about to set out for the village, when Blaisot, the lover of Suzanne, approached her and said:

"I suppose you will soon see my af-fiancé."
"In an hour and a quarter from now," answered the courteous fruit seller.
"And you will speak to her?"
"As I am speaking to you."
"Oh, how happy you will be!"
"What prevents you from going and having the same happiness?"
"She is gentle and kind to me sometimes, and then she is cold and haughty, and I can do nothing to please her."
"Bah! my friend, you are too good to be worried like this. If I were in your place, I would have no fear—no more fear than of the house wolf, of which we are often told, but which we never see."
"While waiting, will you do me a kindness, Mlle. Jacqueline?"
"What is it?"
"Take a commission for Miss Suzanne."
"With much pleasure, M. Blaisot. Is it something to give her?"
"It is indeed," said Blaisot, rubbing his hands to give himself courage.
"And is it heavy to carry?"
"Light as a feather."
"Then I will take it," said the imprudent messenger.
Quick as a flash Blaisot leaned down and kissed the pure white forehead of Jacqueline.
"What are you doing?" cried the astonished girl.
"I have given you a commission."
"That kiss?"
"It is for Suzanne. You will carry it free of charge and not leave it to be called for. You know the address," and he disappeared, laughing, around a turn in the road.
It appeared as if the kiss of Blaisot was heavier than he said, for Jacqueline remained pensive and serious all the way to Blois, and her donkey even seemed to share her melancholy.
On her arrival at Blois she took care not to break her promise and ran quickly to Suzanne's house.
"I have a commission for you!" she said.
"Ah! An embroidered bonnet—some fresh nuts—a rosary blessed by the priest?"
"It is none of these things."
"Oh, hurry and tell me."
"It is a kiss from your betrothed."
"Oh, from him! He is no longer my betrothed."
"Ah, well, take the kiss all the same,
even if you are having another quarrel!
What, you refuse?"
"Absolutely!"
"You will not leave it upon my hands?"
"You need not feel it a burden."
"But I do not wish to keep a kiss that does not belong to me."
"That is your own affair. You should not load yourself with such merchandise.
It may cost you a good deal before you are through."
Jacqueline returned to the village in a state of great perplexity. It seemed as if the kiss was visible upon her forehead, like the mark of a penitent in the church.
She hurried as fast as she could, and as soon as she reached home she hastened to call upon Blaisot, to whom she related her lack of success.
"Oh, she is in one of her proud fits. It is all the same to me. I am rich. I am not ill looking. What is the old saying?
If I find another girl that pleases me, I will drop Suzanne like a weight that is too heavy."

"But your kiss—what shall I do with it?"

"Whatever you wish!"

"Ah! well, if I had known"—

"But if you will please return it to me!"

The charming girl advanced, then quickly recoiled.

The remedy was worse than the disease—the restitution more difficult than the deposit.

"That cannot be," she said. "It is only our husbands that we kiss."

"Ah!" broke forth Blaisot, "there are coronets which crown heads not nearly as pretty as yours. I have never seen such pretty feet in any shoes, and you have a form and eyes to make a harvester dance when his day's work is done."

And in his turn he began to sigh.

Meanwhile the pretty girl had reflected.
She must avoid gossip. She accordingly went to the house of the good priest to ask his advice. He was not at home, but Bertha, his housekeeper, received her.

"And this is all that troubles you?"
said she when she had heard Jacque-line's story.

"And is it not enough?"

"Console yourself. There is near here a deposit of kisses, which contains plenty of room. Since I came to live with the priest more than a hundred thousand kisses have been put there."

"Truly?" exclaimed Jacqueline, overwhelmed.

"Yes, and there is still room for you to deposit yours." She conducted the young girl to the altar of the Virgin.

There Jacqueline freed herself from her load.

She felt herself lighter by many pounds after she had deposited the kiss upon the cold stones of the altar.

Two days after this she met Suzanne in the market clothed in gay apparel.

"See here, little one!" she cried mockingly. "I have reflected. Blaisot has a hundred acres of ground and a good mill.
You may give me that kiss now."

"Oh, dear!" answered Jacqueline. "I can't walk round the world with other folks' goods. I no longer have it."

"Where is it, then?"

"Upon the first step of the altar of the Virgin Mary."

"That's good. It is not lost. I will go and get it the very first time I visit the hamlet."

But it was Suzanne who was snared this time, for that very evening Blaisot came to Jacqueline's mother's house in his Sunday clothes.

"Mademoiselle, I must have my kiss."

"It is in the chapel. Go get it there."

"That one does not belong to me. I gave you something to carry. You must either execute your commission or return the kiss to me. That is wholly just. I leave it to your mother."

"What should she have done with it?"
asked her mother. "Jacqueline can kiss only her husband, and she is still too poor to find one."

"I will give her all that I have," said Blaisot.

"You!" exclaimed the two astonished women.

"Of course, when I give commissions,
I pay for them. I will add to it my hand and my name. Will you accept them, beautiful messenger, and be my wife?"

Jacqueline, overwhelmed, nearly fell into her basket of salad.

When, several days afterward, Suzanne went to seek the kiss, the priest made her acquainted with what was going on. Shaking his white head and smiling, he said:

"You will never find it again."

"Somebody has taken it?" asked the coquette.

"No, but Blaisot and Jacqueline were married this morning. They kissed together the holy stone. The three kisses are now blended in a pious and chaste love. You can never recognize now, my dear, the one that was destined for you."

mance.

Etiquette of Letters of Introduction.

In the giving of letters of introduction permission should first be granted even in the case of intimate friends, as the introduction of a person whom you do not know thoroughly and well is attended with danger in many cases, and more particularly when the presentation is made by letter, as the written words always appear to carry more weight with them than the spoken ones, and the recipient of such an epistle feels in duty bound to show the newly introduced every courtesy that lies either in his or her power. Many unpleasant happenings have resulted from unthinking good heartedness that prompted the letter without inducing a careful study of the one to whom it was given.

Many letters of introduction are presented in person, but the more elegant way is to send them by messenger or post, accompanied by the card of the person conferring the introduction and your own with your address on it. A visit should be made within a week after the arrival of the letter by the person receiving it if the acquaintance is desired.

Smashed Idols.

What years and years of labor will men not go through in order to gain the esteem of their fellow man! Yet how uncertain the reward. A thousand successes, a single mistake, and all is lost.
It is said now that if Admiral Tryon had lived he might have been shot for his great blunder. Only those who die or retire at the right moment can hope to retain what they have earned of fame.

Perhaps the cause of this smashing of idols for a first offense is that, feeling ourselves equal as a whole to the idol, we take advantage of the first error that shows the lack of supposed superiority to knock the idol down to the common level. Certain qualities may cause men to become famous, but it is doubtful if in the eyes of an all seeing Spirit we are not all about as evenly made up of what we call bad and good qualities as to make a claim for any superiority other than animal superiority ridiculous.

FORECASTING STORMS

ACCURACY AND TIMELINESS IN FORE-CASTING WEATHER.

Remarkable Success of the United States
Weather Bureau in Foretelling Sudden and Dangerous Changes in the Atmosphere in Various Sections.

The signal achievement of the government weather bureau in predicting the disastrous tornadoes in Iowa 24 hours in advance of their awful visitations brought into new prominence the remarkable accuracy with which in these days of advanced science a weather forecast can be made.

The prediction of the Iowa tornado offers a noteworthy example of the value of the government bureau and illustrates the perfection of the system it employs, but the forecast in point of accuracy is duplicated daily. It isn't every day that a tornado starts on a wild stampede, but the weather sharps are expected to keep the cities and towns of the country posted in advance in regard to the weather. The daily forecast has become an all important element in all calculations, whether of pleasure or of business, and could no more be dispensed with than the telegraph or any of the other agencies which have revolutionized affairs.

Several years ago a couple of young army lieutenants who saw tornadoes in every cloudbank kept the western farmers dodging in and out of low ground cellars until they became round shoulders and neglected their crops, but the young lieutenants' experience is now one of the amusing traditions of the office.
It is told, too, possibly as a joke, that the colored janitor who had rheumatism and looked upon his left leg as a reliable gauge did the prophesying business when the lieutenants were invited to some swell function.

Things are run differently now, as the reliability of the predictions and the able administration of the bureau attest. It is doubtful, moreover, if any country on the globe has a better equipped service. This is due in some measure to the opportunities of study offered by the diverse climatic peculiarities of the United States. These peculiarities make the work of weather prophesying here a most difficult task, requiring the employment of men of wide experience and learning. It is by no means an uncommon circumstance for the weather bureau to chase half a dozen different varieties of storms over the country in a day. It may be hailing in North Dakota, a tornado may be making sad havoc in the western farming belt, a windstorm may be bowling along the Atlantic coast, imperiling shipping, and four or five thunderstorms may be creating alarm in as many different sections.

With all these complications, a short, thickset man, with gray eyebrows and gray mustache, calmly looks over the maps which are made on the reports of every one of the government observers throughout the country and figures out just the kind of weather that may be expected in every state and section.
This short, thickset man, with gray eyebrows and gray mustache, is the official who, on examining the maps on the night of July 6, paused for a moment, and then, to the surprise of his assistants, murmured, "This looks like a tornado."

Major Dunwoody was the officer who read the signs aright. The government observers at Sioux City, Des Moines, Keokuk and Omaha had all reported threatening atmospheric conditions, and their reports when reduced to tracings on the maps showed that the center of the atmospheric disturbances was at Cheyenne, with the winds racing from all four points of the compass toward the Wyoming capital. Major Dunwoody has had an intimate acquaintance with storms for years, and this tornado didn't fool him by pretending to be a blizzard. The major is an old army officer, who understands all about flank movements, and he began to
be expected.

He was sitting on a high stool in the forecasting room at the weather bureau, calculating on the tornado's probable evolution. The major read the report of the storm sentinals at Sioux City and Des Moines over again and then drew a circle, with the center at Cheyenne and the circumference toward the east, touching Davenport. The major's experience taught him that the most trouble might be expected in the southeast segment of the circle, and before 9 o'clock that night all the observers who furnished the alarming reports were instructed by wire to send out warnings to cities and towns on the respective sections, and orders were also given to employ every means to inform the country districts of the impending peril.

Hours before the storm broke with its terrible fury express trains running through the isolated communities had carried the bureau's intelligence, and those who lived far from the railroad station were warned by whistles which were blown according to an established and well understood code.

How quickly all this was accomplished illustrates the efficiency of the government system as directed by Chief Harrington. At 8 o'clock on the night of the 5th the observations were made, and an hour later Major Dunwoody, with quick judgment based on long experience, had located the storm and had sent out a forecast to the threatened community, telling of the dangers to be feared. How much greater might have been the damage to property and how much greater the loss of life but for the warnings!

The weather bureau did not announce that a tornado might be expected, as tornado predictions went out of favor with the young army lieutenants. The warning, as sent out, was to the effect that severe local thunderstorms were threatened, and the farmers knew full well what was meant. As interpreted by them it signified that a ground cellar would be a good place in which to spend

A Plea for the Dogs.

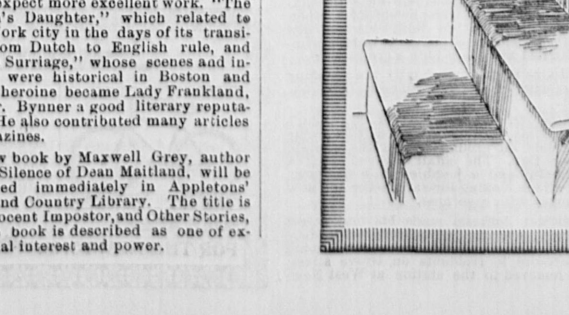

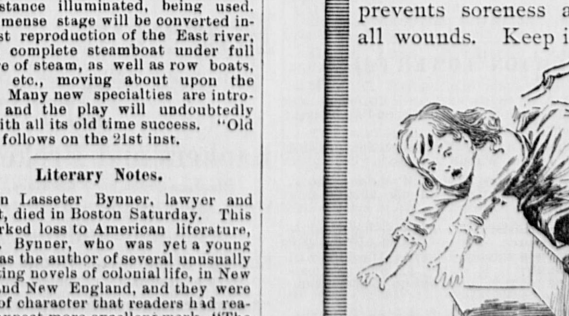

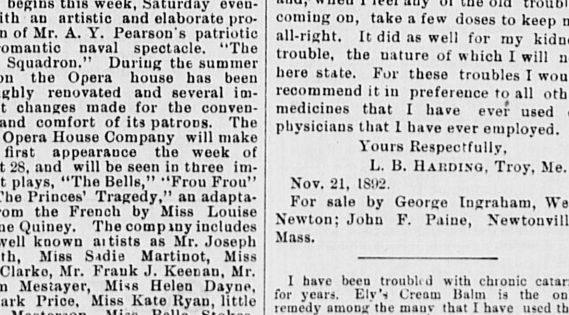

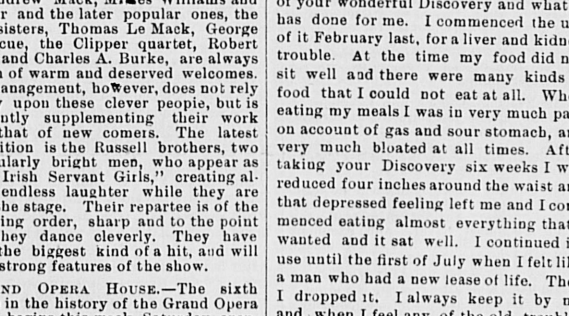

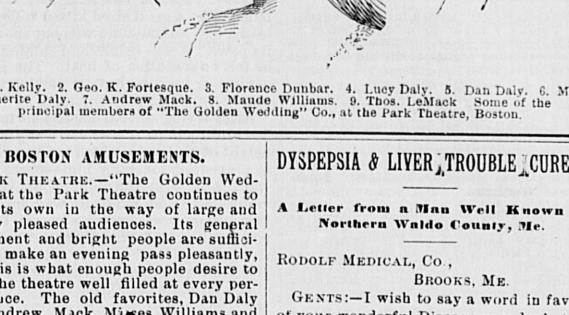

To the Editor of the Graphic:
The question that agitates the public mind (or at least a part of it) is, has the dog no rights that the long suffering public are bound to respect? Some people, and quite respectable people too, are asking that the liberties of the dogs should be still further curtailed, particularly where the dogs are known to be cross and ugly; they being afraid that their children will be terribly bitten or badly frightened, with resulting consequences too horrible for a parent to think of. Now why should they not shut their children in the house, or a small yard, or tie them to a stake, so they will not get in the way of the dogs and tempt them to take a chew? Only a few days ago, on one of the public streets of our city, a young lady was attacked by two large and ferocious dogs, and quite badly bitten and terribly frightened. It is true, she did nothing to tantalize or vex the dogs; but why should young ladies be allowed to go along the streets when dogs are running at large? In this case a neighbor interfered with the pastime of the dogs and took them off, and so they did not get hurt; but suppose they had broken their teeth on a corset steel, or something of the sort; the owner would probably have been very angry and possibly sued for damages (the person who is bitten gets damages enough without suing) and there would have been hard feelings between neighbors. I know of some men who are so unreasonable as to prize the safety of their children more than they desire that dog owners shall have the privilege of allowing their pets to run about the town, and are breathing out threatenings and slaughter against all dogs that come in their way. Now why should these men be allowed to run at large? Why shouldn't they be chained or muzzled? But according to common report, the dogs have firm friends in our wise and good City Fathers, for it is said they can be depended on to construe the law favorably to the dog, every time, (I hope this is a mistake); but some of us who are not so wise and good are wishing we might have laws that would give the children some protection from the dogs.

Lemonade Beats Bandoline.

"I was out to a dance recently," said an acquaintance to me, "and a funny thing happened. It was not so very funny either, but it made me laugh after it was over. You see, it was as hot as a bake oven, and the room was crowded to suffocation. I had a girl, and we were waltzing around as best we could, when suddenly the girl gasped, turned pale and said, 'Get me out to the air.' I stopped and released her and offered her my arm, when bump! down she went on the floor in a heap. Fainted away, see? Dead as a herring. What did I do? Why, I tried to pick her up and couldn't do it, for she was a heavy weight. Then I succeeded, with the aid of others, in getting her to the porch, but she wouldn't revive. Then I ran into the refreshment room for water, but the tank was empty, and the only thing they had was lemonade.

"Something had to be done, and I got two glasses, ran back and emptied their contents into her face—not exactly 'in-to' but 'onto.' After using 30 cents' worth of nice, sweet lemonade she came to. Well, say. You would have died to see her hair. Sticky? Why bandoline, quince seed, gum arabic and kindred concoctions were not in it. Lemonade beats them all. Was she mad? Well, I guess yes. She said I was intoxicated and a natural born fool. Some one else took her home. I didn't."—Youngstown (O.) Telegram.

A PRIVATE ARBORETUM.

SOME OF THE BEAUTIFUL PLANTS AND TREES ON MR. LEESON'S GROUNDS.

The Sunday Herald had a page devoted to the fine gardens about Boston among which Hon. J. R. Leeson's is prominent. It said:

In Newton Centre, 10 minutes' walk easterly from the station of that name on the "circumferential" road, is the residence of Hon. J. R. Leeson, a member of the Governor's council and a Boston merchant.

Some men, it is said, own and run elegant estates because it seems to be the thing for a wealthy man to do. But not so Mr. Leeson. He has an intimate acquaintance with all plants and trees on his lawn and in his greenhouses. His thoroughness in this respect is admirable. He designs to have a specimen upon his estate of every tree that will grow in this climate, and already has very many of them. He is as familiar with their botanical names as he is with the names of his friends, and their habits, their native climes and their worth are as an open book before him. The same is true of his many orchids, the growing of which affords him peculiar delight. He says that it is very restful after a day of confinement in the counting room to get close to the great heart of nature and study some of her processes as unveiled in plants and flowers. The interesting and practical way that he talks about his favorite is a liberal education upon that subject.

Mr. Leeson's enthusiasm as a horticulturist dates back many years, and many practical suggestions have come from him, one of which was the offering of prizes to school children for gathering the nests of bees of the tent caterpillar, which has gone far toward exterminating that pest in Newton. That is too long a story to tell here, but is worth telling as a hint to the residents of the other suburbs.

Mr. Leeson has resided on his present estate 20 years, lacking one, and has made of it a model residence. As it is approached, the wide and hospitable portal to the grounds is a cordial invitation to enter, and it ushers one into a winding driveway, probably unique among all driveways in New England, in that it is bordered on both sides with black walnut trees (Juglans nigra), which have a very graceful habit, and when they have become a little larger will form a perfect archway over the approach to the north front of the house. This beautiful feature of Leeson's estate—the hospitable portals and the driveway—are shown in the trees.

The lawn, which is set with the trees which this owner knows so familiarly, stretches down an easy slope away from the northern front of the house. This was formerly covered with boulders, which were removed and used in the erection of a stone stable. Then the land was put in condition for grass and trees, which means in this case that it was highly fertilized, for Mr. Leeson says that a tree as well as a man, if it is going to amount to anything, must be well fed.

This arboretum has many specimens that might well grieve the enthusiasm of the type in these matters, especially if Mr. Leeson, who has such a genuine admiration for these friends of his, were along to act as interpreter and guide.

Just in front of the house is a most beautiful specimen of the Nordmann silver fir (Abies Nordmanniana). It is a very rare tree in these parts, and was first found on Mt. Ararat by Prof. Nordmann. This specimen has a graceful habit, it is of nearly perfect symmetry, and it grows as though it was in love with New England. It produces this year its first cones. The fir family is represented by several other specimens, among them the Rocky mountain blue fir, a valuable tree (Abies concolor), and the Douglas fir of Oregon, a tree that covers thousands and thousands of acres, and grows very rapidly to a size suitable for timber.

The spruces include several interesting representatives, such as the Colorado silver spruce (Picea pungens), a tree whose foliage is of the color of the white m-tal its native state produces so abundantly. Perhaps there is some secret connection that explains why the color of this spruce so far departs from that of the rest of its race. Alcock's spruce (Picea Aleutica) is another striking specimen.

The pines are the largest collection, and include the foreign as well as indigenous varieties, the common as well as the rare. Indeed, at one corner of the estate is a circular bower completely hedged about, save for the entrance, with white pines, which are pruned to make a high, thick hedge, showing that this tree, the most valuable of all the timber trees of this country, finds itself to other purposes also.

Among the rare specimens of this family is a Japanese umbrella pine (Scaevola verticillata), and the Korean pine (Pinus koraiensis). The great pines of the Pacific coast (Pinus ponderosa and P. Lambertiana) have representatives, also known as sugar pines, from the sweet inner bark which is prized by the Indians for food. Another pine of the same region has a seed that is sweet like a nut.

The larches are represented by a Japanese, an American and a European specimen, and their general features are so near alike that the ordinary observer would not distinguish between them.

One of the most valuable trees for ornamental purposes, says the Herald, is the yellow willow (Salix discolor). It belongs to the pea family of trees, and bears beautiful white flowers.

The laurel-leaved willow (Salix aquifolia), with its beautiful glossy green foliage, and the chestnut oak, a tree that partakes of the nature of both of the kinds for which it is named, are interesting specimens in this collection.

That tree which is now being planted so extensively through the West on account of its valuable qualities, the catalpa, has a representative here. The pecan nut hickory, the Kentucky coffee tree, which bears a nut resembling the coffee bean, and which is used in the place of it in the South, and the ash-leaved maple are all very interesting to the student of trees and forests.

In magnolias Mr. Leeson has some elegant specimens, comprising representatives of several families, whose individual traits furnish him with food for reflection.

Mr. Leeson shows with some degree of pride his "centennial oak" which happens to be a chestnut. It seems that in 1870 the late ex-Gov. Walter Harrison of New Hampshire, father-in-law of Mr. Leeson, set out this tree. It was very small and he took it to be an oak. Seventeen years have gone by since, and those unfamiliar with the rapid growth of chestnut trees would think it impossible that so large a tree could have grown in so few years.

Mr. Leeson has some beautiful conservatories in which tropical fruits are growing, such as oranges and bananas.

But it is the orchids to which he turns with ever fresh delight. He has both the terrestrial and epiphytal, some of which are very rare and valuable. One is the coddleberry, a Wagneri, to secure a plant of which Hon. Frederick Ames paid $1250. These are plants which store up their sustenance in a hump or bulb like a camel, and pass long seasons without other nourishment, which sometimes carry their blossoms four months, which are so uncanny in many respects, yet nevertheless prove capable of arousing the interest of all who take pains to make their close acquaintance, as Mr. Leeson has done. He finds that some kinds are indigenous in this country, and recently showed at the fair a beautiful one in blossom which he found last winter on the banks of the Indian river in Florida, growing on the trunk of a live oak. Mr. Leeson has a grapeery also from which he cuts fine fruit.

Hon. J. R. Leeson's Position.

Early in the summer it was reported throughout our councillor district that the Hon. J. R. Leeson of Newton Centre would refuse a re-nomination because of his inability to neglect private business, for the thorough performance of a councillor's duties. Shortly after this report gained publicity, the following editorial appeared in the Springfield Daily Republican: "J. R. Leeson of Newton and Boston, councillor from the 34 district, has made up his mind that he could not devote another year to the service of the people; but there has been such a call from all over his district that Councillor Leeson will accept a re-nomination. This is as it should be—as well as a deserved compliment to good sense in office."

About the same time a similar editorial appeared in the Boston Evening Record. The true state of affairs, however, seems not to be fully appreciated throughout the district, inasmuch as many have been talking up other candidates on the theory that the present efficient councillor would not consent to serve.

A very delightful call was made upon Mr. Leeson at his Boston office last Wednesday, and relative to the councillor nomination he expressed himself substantially as follows: "It is true that some time ago I informed the chairman of the Newton ward and city committee that I did not feel as though I could give my attention to the duties devolving upon a councillor for another year, and therefore would not desire a re-nomination. The chairman in turn said that he would inform the people of the district of my determination. He had no sooner done this, when urgent requests to reconsider my intention were received from all quarters of the district. I was informed that it was customary and expected that a councillor serve two terms at least, and many of my friends insisted that it was a duty I owed the people to accept of a re-nomination and election. After due consideration, and being convinced that I had a duty to perform, I consented to accept of a re-nomination. The fact that I have not discontinued the editorials of the Springfield Daily Republican and the Boston Record, would, it seems to me, quite clearly demonstrate that I was prepared to serve the people of the State another year if called upon."

Councillor Leeson's record during his connection with the Governor's Council is highly recommended and praised among the better element of both parties. His conservative, non-partisan and consistent course has done much towards silencing the guns of the enemy who a year ago were showering tons of shot into the camp of the council. His conduct has taken the wind out of the enemies' sails, as it were. Just as soon as his attitude in this question is clearly understood throughout the district, no further talk of other candidates will be heard.

Had Councillor Leeson adhered to his original determination, ex-Senator Raymond of Somerville would have had an excellent show for the nomination; but matters stand today, Mr. Raymond will not be a candidate—that is, we have the best of reasons for thinking that he will not. Next year the track will be clear for him.—Cambridge Press.

BUSY BURGLARS.

THEY CRACK A DEPOT SAFE AND ROB A DWELLING HOUSE.

The Newton Lower Falls station on the Boston & Albany railroad was entered early Monday morning. The door of the ticket office was forced and the safe blown open and robbed of its contents. The money obtained represented the receipts since Saturday afternoon, and the total amount was about $75.

The usual method was resorted to in opening the safe. Holes were bored through the door and the cavities partly filled with gunpowder, which was ignited by means of a fuse. The force of the explosion blew the safe door out, and resulted besides in considerable damage to that portion of the building near the ticket office. Several safes were torn from position and the glass completely shattered.

The Newton Lower Falls station is located on the Wellesley side of the Charles river, and the safe cracking job is believed to have been the work of the gang that has been successfully operating for the past few months in Wellesley and vicinity.

A house in Weston, just over the Wellesley line, occupied by Mr. S. B. Hilder, was entered Monday morning, it is thought, about 3 o'clock, and relieved of clothing and jewelry valued at $50.

The police believe that the same persons were concerned in the safe blowing and house breaking aff. The extent of the losses in Wellesley by recent visitations of crooks figures up a large sum, a haul only a few weeks ago from the house in that town of President Jacobus's of the Trades' National Bank of Boston representing a value of about $700.

The Wellesley officials have offered a reward for the apprehension of the persons concerned in the various breaks that have occurred within the past few months, but so far not the slightest clew has been obtained. Wellesley residents are very much excited, and are calling loudly for additional police protection.

The Chinese pay their doctor only so long as he keeps them in health. They believe in preventing rather than curing disease. This is sound sense, and one of the strongest recommendations of Ayer's Sarsaparilla, a medicine which not only cures diseases but prevents them.

THE GERMAN EMPEROR AT COWES—AN EXCITING YACHT RACE WON BY THE BRITANNIA.

"The following gives a good account of the 'Start Out' of the Cowes carnival from a landsman's point of view," writes the Boston Herald's special correspondent under the date of Cowes, Eng., Aug. 2, 1893.

"The strains of instrumental music floated across the Solent last night from the Prince of Wales' yacht, the Osborne. Numbers of boats which put off from the shore and the yachts in the roads hovered around the royal craft, their occupants enjoying the concert with which the heir-apparent was regaling the Kaiser and a select party. His majesty afterward retired to his own yacht, the Hohenzollern, which is moored near at hand, and which continues to attract the wondering attention of all visitors. Her size suggests the possibility that she may be an Atlantic liner, while her ram calls up ideas of a battleship. Those who have been on board describe her as a floating palace.

"The Kaiser arose this morning at his customary hour, and after he entered at breakfast the Duke of Connaught, Princess Christian, Princess Henry of Battenberg, who are guests of the Queen at Osborne House, from which they drove down to East Cowes and embarked at Trinity pier for the Hohenzollern. There was a good deal of firing off Cowes again this morning. The American man-of-war Chicago, which arrived on Sunday, thundered forth a salute, which resounded over the blue waters of the Solent and rattled along the coast. Then the Stoch, yet another German war vessel, which had just come up, joined in the noisy greeting. The German Emperor spent the day principally in yacht racing. He did not enter the Meteor for any of the events in the program of the London Yacht Club, but joined the Prince of Wales on board the Britannia, which competed in the first race. His majesty wore a light colored yachting suit, with a white peaked cap and brown boots, while the Prince of Wales was dressed in the regulation serge. Both his majesty and his royal highness looked remarkably well as they stood up in the vessels getting in position.

"At the start the Britannia made a brave show with her expansive sails, and created among the spectators a keen interest, which even the mysterious American craft, the Navahoe, could not divert. The weather was beautifully fine, and the parade was crowded with onlookers, whilst the headquarters of the Royal Yacht Squadron, the London Yacht Club and the fashionable hotels on the front presented an array of marine glasses in the hands of enthusiastic yachtsmen and yachtswomen.

"Six yachts started, but the race was practically with the Britannia, Valkyrie and Navahoe. The craft were ordered to the eastward, and were allowed a course of 50 miles to be sailed. Leaving Cowes the Navahoe had a slight lead, the Valkyrie coming next and the Britannia third; these three hugging each other's quarters. By the time they got clear of the crowded roads, the Valkyrie had exchanged places with the Navahoe, while the Britannia was making some progress. But the Britannia held her place. There was an exciting neck-and-neck race between the Valkyrie and the Navahoe round the Calshot lightship and down the Lepe. Here the royal yacht gained on her rivals, and it was seen that she was slowly but surely leaving the distance between her and the leaders. As they ran for the east the whole interest became centered in this front group of three—Valkyrie, Navahoe and Britannia. Running out to the Warner, they gybed around the lightship in a mass. Capt. Carter of the Britannia kept a keen lookout, ready to take advantage of any opportunity.

"The German Emperor appeared one of the most interested on board at this crisis in the race, his majesty keenly noting the behavior of the Britannia, and eagerly scanning the other craft. The Britannia's opportunity soon came. While her rivals were making short tacks, she slowly jockeyed to the windward of each other, the Britannia made a long reach for Calshot, and entered the roads the leader of the fleet. The excitement on the shore as the yachts came up for the finish was simply intense. The Britannia kept the lead and won what was a splendid race by 1 minute 2 seconds, while the Valkyrie at the Navahoe by 21 seconds. The Emperor and prince were loudly cheered as they came in victors. The blue jackets on the vessels in the harbor joined in a loud chorus of applause upon the Britannia hoisting her winning flag, thus showing that she had added another triumph to her already long list of successes." (From "Freight Yachting Letters," to appear in Boston Sunday Herald, Aug. 20, 1893.)

BOOKS AND MAGAZINES.

THE NEW ENGLAND MAGAZINE.

The August New England Magazine is better than ever before, and it significantly marks its change of management with the publication of a colored picture of Mr. Cavour in midsummer. It is a picture which will interest all who have visited the wonderful White Mountains, and the print itself is well worth framing. It is not a mere lithograph of the old style, but possesses absolute photographic reproduction of detail and delicate blending of the colors and tones of nature. The New England is the first popular magazine to make use of the wonderful recent advances in color illustration, and this particular issue is of great interest to all amateurs in photographic and art work.

An article that will be read with much pleasure in Nova Scotia, and indeed in every part of Canada, and with great profit in the United States, is Thomas F. Anderson's "Nova Scotia." It describes the scenic and historic attractions of this beautiful garden country, gives a genial picture of the social and domestic life of the people and their interests, and outlines some of the principal resources of the region, with an account of its commercial fortunes. It is finely illustrated from photographs and sketches by Sears Gallagher, H. Martin Bell, and others. The author is a Nova-Scotian, hailing from the lovely old town of Digby, and he writes with keen sympathy and ample knowledge.

CASTORIA

for Infants and Children.

"Castoria is so well adapted to children that I recommend it as superior to any prescription known to me." H. A. ARCHER, M. D., 111 So. Oxford St., Brooklyn, N. Y.

Castoria cures Colic, Constipation, Sour Stomach, Diarrhoea, Eruption, Kills Worms, gives sleep, and promotes digestion. Without injurious medication.

"The use of 'Castoria' is so universal and its merits so well known that it seems a work of supererogation to endorse it. Few are the intelligent families who do not keep Castoria within easy reach."

"For several years I have recommended your 'Castoria,' and shall always continue to do so as it has invariably produced beneficial results."

THE OHIO CHEMICAL CO.—GENTLEMEN:—I have been using your cure for tobacco habit, and found it would do what you claim for it. I used ten cents worth of the strongest chewing tobacco a day, and from one to five cigars; or I would smoke from ten to forty pipes of tobacco. Have chewed and smoked for twenty-five years, and two packages of your Tablets cured me so I have no desire for it. B. M. JAYLORD, Leslie, Mich.

DORIS FERRY, N. Y.—GENTLEMEN:—Some time ago I sent for $1.00 worth of your Tablets for Tobacco Habit. I received them all right, and although I was both a heavy smoker and chewer, they did the work in less than three days. I am cured. Truly yours, MATTHEW JOHNSON, P. O. Box 45, Pittsburg, Pa.

THE OHIO CHEMICAL CO.—GENTLEMEN:—It gives me pleasure to speak a word of praise for your Tablets. My son was strongly addicted to the use of liquor, and through a friend, I was led to try your Tablets. He was a heavy and constant drinker, but after using your Tablets but three days he quit drinking, and will not touch liquor of any kind. I have waited four months before writing you, in order to know the cure was permanent. Yours truly, MRS. HELEN MORRISON, CHENANGO, N. Y.

THE OHIO CHEMICAL CO.—GENTLEMEN:—Your Tablets have performed a miracle in my case. I have used morphine, hypodermically, for seven years, and have been cured by the use of two packages of your Tablets, and without any effort on my part. Address all Orders to

A QUATERNION.

Let there be light within thy soul
O'er the fair world of things to wonder,
And each fine link that binds the whole
Nicer to note and well to ponder.

Let there be Liberty with broad wing,
At plastic Nature's high dictation,
From crude, chaotic stuff to bring
The magic of a new creation.

Let there be Love, that each free force
May seek and apply find another,
To move in sweet, harmonious course,
And work as brother works with brother.

Let there be Law to sit supreme
On steadfast throne of sanctioned order,
That each new hatched, untamed scheme
May fear to cross the sacred border.

Held by these four, by right divine
That wisely guide and sweetly sway us,
Else tossed about in aimless rout
And drifting blindly into chaos.

THE COURIER.

"I intrust you with a sacred duty," said the general as he handed his courier a letter. "Remember, you are to stop for nothing. If you fail, you will be shot, but if you succeed the Order of St. George will adorn your breast. Now go, and God be with you in all your perils."

The young courier knelt and swore to protect the life of the czar with his own, and then he pushed the curtain aside, leaving the general alone.

The evening was fair, cold and beautiful. As the general leaned from the balcony of the palace he thought what a farce this ball was when his heart was full of terror for the czar and all Russia.

In the adjoining room, near a marble pillar, stood a young girl covered with magnificent satin and jewels. Looking at her with flashing eyes was a man of about 40, with coal black hair and cruel expression.

"Nodine, this must be your work," she shivered as he spoke, but Otaroff, the traitor, had no mercy.

"And to it at once!" he said.

"What is my task?" she asked him, and again she shivered.

"An easy one, my beautiful queen. Merely to throw yourself in his way, and this courier will forget the czar and all Russia."

"I doubt it," she answered.

"You must not doubt it," he cried fiercely and held her wrist so tightly that the pain made her face white to the very lips.

"Our scheme must go through this time, and the courier will arrive to late. You hear, my beautiful daughter?"

"I hear you," she answered and wrenched her wrist from his grasp.

"But, father," she said pleadingly, "you have never used me as a decoy before. Oh, I beg of you not to do it now! I cannot do it. I cannot."

"Fool!" he hissed at her. "You little know your power. With your beauty you can do anything."

"And would you sell it?" she asked. He hesitated, then said:

"Yes, for the cause."

"You are a strange father," she said slowly, looking at him with no spark of love in her eyes, "but I may prove traitor too. What, then, father?"

He bent his head and whispered in her ear. "I will shoot you, my beautiful queen; so take care. For the first time tonight I doubt you, but 'tis an insane idea. Go into the ballroom and dance an hour, then return to your house and prepare for your journey."

She went from him down the marble steps into the room beyond and never once looked back. Her heart was sad and heavy. Many noticed the beautiful woman, but wondered why her face was so tragic.

It was about 8 the next night after the ball when the courier of the czar arrived at the first posthouse and asked for a change of horses.

"Stop a little!" asked the worthy postmaster.

"No," answered the courier in a tone which silenced all other questions.

"I want horses and nothing else."

The Russian looked with much admiration on this tall courier and speedily went for them. With a clasp of the whip the tarantass was off, and the little Russian was alone, but not for long. Down the road he saw another tarantass coming at breakneck speed. "Ah, perhaps they will stop," he said to himself. The little man had to flee for his life, for the horses dashed on, and he only caught sight of a very beautiful face in a red hood.

A dreadful storm broke upon the night, and in the darkness a flying tarantass dashed by—the one occupied by the courier. "Some one else in this dreadful storm," thought he. "God help them."

When the first dawn of day came, the rain had ceased, and they were almost past the dangers. In the middle of the road lay the figure of a woman, and the horses almost ran over her.

"She is dead!" cried the courier as he laid his hand upon her heart. "No; she lives. I cannot see a mortal die like this." So, with the help of the driver, he carried her to the tarantass and laid her gently down. There he sat, looking at the girl's pale face and wondering what he should do with her.

Suddenly she opened her large, dark eyes and gazed into his face. Her wondrous beauty captivated him, and he forgot to ask her if she was hurt. He only gazed and said nothing.

"You are a courier?" she asked at length.

"No; I am captain of the Fourteenth guards. And you?"

"I am going to meet my father at Iaham," she answered. Her voice was wonderfully low and sweet, and he believed all she told him.

They journeyed on together, and the time sped rapidly away.

and kiss me." Her voice, her smile seemed to make the air he breathed delightful, and his nerves thrilled with joy. How could he help loving her? Seeing her in all the glory of her youth and beauty, he forgot the czar and all Russia.

They were standing beside a high rock, and with an impulse prompted by his great passion he knelt at her feet, kissing her hands madly and begging her to tell him her name.

Her poor heart beat wildly. For the first time she loved, and at the cost of her life she resolved to be true not to her oath but to the man who knelt before her.

"Go! Flee for your life!" she cried. "My name is—nihilist!"

He started to his feet and turned to leave her in a dazed manner. A sharp report of a pistol sounded in the air, and the courier of the czar fell wounded.

With lightning quickness Nodine knelt beside her lover, and while smoothing back his hair with one hand, with the other she stole the imperial letter and slipped it into her breast. Then she left him, for she had made up her mind that she would carry the important message to the czar herself.

After traveling day and night without food or sleep she reached the palace and delivered the letter to the czar.

"What can I do for you?" asked the czar of all Russia.

"What do you do for nihilists?" she asked him.

"We shoot them," he answered angrily. "Then I shall be shot." She said it so calmly and deliberately that the czar looked at her in surprise.

"Nihilist or no nihilist, my child, you have saved my life, and therefore I spare yours. You may return to your home in safety."

With a cry like a hunted animal she fell at his feet.

"Don't send me back. The bullet that struck the courier was meant for me. I heard the word 'Traitor' hissed by my own father, and if I go back he will not miss his aim again. He has sworn to kill me if I prove false to the cause, and he will keep his oath. I pray you, don't send me back."

He saw her agony was genuine, and placing his hand on her head said: "Rise, child. You stay here." At that moment Ivan Liveresky, the courier of the czar, dashed into the room. His clothes were covered with mud and his body weak from loss of blood.

"Thank God!" he cried when he saw the czar. "Otaroff, the traitor, is captured, has confessed all, and you are safe."

"He was my father," said Nodine softly.

The courier caught the back of a chair for support, and the czar turned to her in anger.

"Yes, do with me what you will. I am Nodine Otaroff, who despises her name, her father and most of all herself."

"Wait a moment," said the courier to the czar; "there is some mistake. Otaroff gave me some papers and confessed having stolen a child out of revenge from the rich Cordisky. He name was Nodine." And Liveresky handed the documents to the czar, who in turn, after glancing over them, gave them to the young girl.

"I will send a messenger to Moscow, and one who would travel night and day, without sleep or food, to deliver this letter to the noblest of Russians." So said the czar and left the room.

"You have saved my life!" the courier cried.

"And you mine," answered Nodine.

"Yet, my loved one, it is worthless without yours."

"Then," she said, with glad tears in her eyes, "I give mine for thine. I love thee, Ivan Liveresky."

He took her in his arms and kissed her many times. When Cordisky arrived he found he had gained a child only to lose her again, for Nodine gave her heart and hand to a young soldier decorated with the Order of St. George, given to him by the czar of all Russia.—Exchange.

Dr. Mary Did Not Whistle.

When Dr. Mary Walker was in Philadelphia not long ago, she wanted to ride in a Market street cable car. She signaled the gripman, who appears to have taken no notice, and the doctor put after the conveyance in indignant haste.

"Why didn't you stop?" she said sternly to the conductor.

"Beg pardon, sir," replied the latter. "I didn't hear you whistle."

"Oh, you horrid brute!" exclaimed the doctor, "what do you mean?"

The conductor began to realize the situation and stammered an apology.

"You should never judge a man by his clothes," said Dr. Walker, with the charming smile she can wear, "and the same rule applies to women."

She did not seem to mind the curious gaze of the other passengers, and upon her signal the car stopped instantly. As she got off the conductor tipped his hat, and she raised her high silk hat in dignified acknowledgment. —Philadelphia Press.

Professor Frothingham's Discovery.

Professor Frothingham of Princeton college returned not long since from an extended archaeological tour through central Italy, and one of the most interesting results of it is the proof he has adduced to the effect that many of the Christian churches which have been supposed to date from the early centuries of our era really belong much later—in fact, well into the middle ages.—College Bulletin.

Feeding Horses in Norway.

In Norway horses always have a bucket of water placed beside each animal's allowance of hay. After each mouthful of hay they take a sip of water. It is said that this mode of feeding is beneficial, and to it the fact is attributed that a broken winded horse is rarely seen in Norway.

COLONEL PHILLIPS' SPECTACLES.

Story of Their Use as Related by the Big Hairy Man From the Prairies.

"The way you Chicago people look at things reminds me of my old friend, Colonel John Phillips."

The speaker was a large, hairy man, with a big slouch hat and a voice evidently better adapted to the acoustic properties of the prairie than the smoking room. He appeared to realize this as he glanced around and saw every man in the room looking toward him, some smiling, some scowling.

"Tell us about your friend, the colonel," suggested a real estate agent who had the hairy giant on the string for a big cash trade.

"Why," continued the big man with the prairie voice, "Phillips saw everything that belonged to him big and everything belonging to me small."

"That's human nature," the agent was suggesting, but the prairie man interrupted with:

"No, 'twan't no human nature. 'Twas spectacles! He got 'em made in this town. I believe you people all wear 'em too."

"What peculiar properties did your friend's spectacles possess?" asked a curious listener.

"Just as I've said. They made his property loom up in regular Chicago World's fair fashion, but squashed other people's stuff worse'n a Zimri Dwiggin's back!"

"How could he do this?"

"Why, the blamed things worked on an ax's and showed things telescope fashion, you know. 'Spose there was a horse trade up; he'd let you look at your own horse through the ordinary little end of his glasses, but when you came to look at his he'd get at his specks again under some pretext—just flipping 'em over the magnifying way—and you'd see a magnificent animal. It was the same way with houses, tracts of land, wheatfields, changing money—anything. Once you looked through his glasses at anything, you were his victim, for you felt as if you couldn't live until you'd traded just as Phillips wanted you to. But he met his reward. He tried a bluff game on big Buffalo Jones of Arizona, to whom he had by that spectacle jugglery sold 100 jackass rabbits for burrows, and looked at big Jones' six gun through the little end of his glasses, trying to put him down small, you know. But, alas, it didn't work!"

"What happened?" asked the agent.

"Big Jones' gun went off repeatedly just as Colonel Phillips was adjusting his glasses. It was as well perhaps," continued the prairie man, dropping his voice so low that the howling of tugs in the river and lake could again be heard, "for my friend had acquired such a habit of trying to talk up to the magnifying side of these glasses that his long enjoyed reputation for veracity was entirely spoiled. We buried him at Big Jones' expense, and to prevent a recurrence of such a tragedy I took possession of the spectacles, and—"

"Whatever became of them?" asked a hungry looking man who had gone broke on a World's fair hotel scheme.

"I now wear 'em myself," said the big, hairy prairie man.—Chicago Tribune.

This Frog Weighed a Ton.

The labyrinthine, a huge creature resembling a toad or a frog, and which lived in the earlier periods of our planet's history, has been found in a surprising state of preservation in the marl beds of Huelzweitz, Hungary. All species of this gigantic frog are now extinct and are known to the naturalists only through the investigations of the geologists, who have often found parts or entire fossils of the monster in strata of the triassic portion of the mesozoic period. Southwick mentions it in a three line entry in his "Quizzism and Key," under the head "A Frog as Large as an Ox," and in Barnett's "Geological Epochs" it is considered in a chapter on "Huge Froglike Creatures of the Mesozoic Age."

The specimen unearthed in the Hungarian marl bed is entire with the exception of the left forearm and the lower jaw. The skull measures 18 inches between the eye sockets and weighs, exclusive of the missing underjaw, 312 pounds. The bones which have been discovered up to date (and there 's still hopes of finding the missing parts), with the adhering matrix, weigh 1,800 pounds, almost a ton.—St. Louis Republic.

The Jury Sulted the Lawyer.

A Chicago attorney, somewhat noted for his sharp practice, sent his client one day to watch the case. Word came to him that his case was next on the docket, and he hurried over to find the opposing counsel already beginning. In vain he looked for his client. He was nowhere to be seen. In vain he asked for delay, but the court told him that the carelessness of a client would not allow such a thing. At last he glanced into the jury box and saw his client there.

The stupid man had thought he heard his name called and had marched in with the rest. The opposing counsel was so anxious to hurry the case along that he neglected to examine the jury. Seeing the thing was in his own hands, the Chicago attorney turned to the court. "I withdraw all objection," he said. "I have my client where I want him."—Green Bag.

No Bogus Italian Counts.

American heireses need have little fear of bogus Italian counts for the same reason that there is no imitation Italian wine—the real article is too cheap. The possession of a title in Palermo gives nothing great of itself, but its indispensable accompaniment is a carriage, horses and driver in livery. To maintain these on an income of next to nothing a year it is often necessary to eat macaroni and thick soup for a regular diet, do a great part of one's housework in gloomy, faded apartments and sit about in old clothes all day long to await the magic hour of 8 p. m. Then mother and daughter don their finery, the carriage is driven to the door and it begins—the long, ceremonious drive to La Favorita and the Giardino Inglese.—Stirling Hellig's Letter.

HIS PUBLIC SERVICE.

GEN. BADEAU WRITES OF SHERMAN'S LONG CAREER IN THE SENATE.

"In 1862 Senator Sherman helped to make the paper money of the government a legal tender," writes Gen. Badeau, in commenting on the public service of the veteran senator; "18 years afterward he superintended the overthrow of his own work, and did his country as much as essential service in one act as in the other. Like a real statesman, he adapted his measures to the varying emergencies that were requisite to the salvation of the state in one crisis and threatened its financial genius in another; he saw the second necessity as clearly as the first, and himself tore down the very fabric he had assisted to build; just as his soldier brother turned on the enemy the very guns he once had assailed and used the same bulwarks for defence he had attempted to destroy. Many and many a time in battle did Gen. Sherman carry the breastworks of his adversary and instantly make them formidable to the men who had just been threatening him from behind them. Many a time did he attack the lines he had once held because the fortunes of the day had changed. No greater proof of the senator's sagacity can be found than the fact that at different crises he was for and opposed to the issue of paper money as a legal tender."

"The situation now is not dissimilar. It is hardly three years since he introduced the silver bill which bears his name, and which many believe to be the origin of the evils that threaten the country today. He thought, in 1890, that unless this measure was adopted still more noxious ones would follow, and this tub to the whale he hoped might prevent greater disasters. Others thought the tub far too large, and the disasters were certainly not averted. But, seeing the result, Sherman is not afraid to reverse his own act and work for the repeal of the silver bill that bears his name. Charles Lamb once wrote a farce that was unsuccessful. At the first performance he and his sister sat in the box and applauded as hard as they could until it was certain that the piece would be damned; then they turned about and hissed louder than any one in the house. The senator rivals Lamb, and his pluck in the matter is as conspicuous as his sense and his patriotism."—[From "Senator Sherman's Public Service," in Boston Sunday Herald, Aug. 20, 1893.]

Washington Street, Brighton.

There has been a great effort made to have Washington street, in Brighton, over which the Oak Square cars run, widened, so that double track; could be laid and room for the passage of teams left on each side.

The Brighton item sums up the result of a recent hearing as follows:

"The objections made to the present plan of widening Washington street, came, as was expected from the representatives of the church property affected. The arguments of the remonstrants are given in another column, and it must be conceded that they are sound ones. Especially do we agree with them in bewailing the loss of the fine trees which now offer for that portion of Washington street protection from the winds of winter and cool shade during such as the present hot weather. On the question of noise, the widening will not in our opinion be as great an objection as imagined."

No improvement of this kind can be accomplished without sound objections from some source and in the present case we believe there is cause for congratulation that the real obstacles are so comparatively trifling."

The Boston City Government has appropriated sixty thousand dollars for the widening.

Athletic Association.

The Newton Athletic Association will hold a handicap meet at Newton Centre, Labor Day morning, on the new city athletic grounds. The preliminary heats will be given at 9.30 a. m. The program will consist of the following list of events: 100 yard dash, mile bicycle race, 220 yard dash, putting 16 lbs. shot, 440 yard run, running hop step and jump, 1-2 mile run, running high jump, one mile run, and a special team race of one half mile between two rival teams in the association. Entries made to F. C. Kistner, secretary, Newton Centre, or any member of the governing committee, and close at 6 p. m., Aug. 28th. All events will be handicap except the team race, and open only to members of the association. There will be first and second prizes of silver cups given in all events, and it is hoped there will be over 150 entries for the day's sport. It has been decided to adopt for a club symbol a "navy blue fleur-de-lis."

WATERLOO OF THE RUSSIAN INFLUENZA.

La Grippe Halted and Routed by Rodolphi's New Medical Discovery. In case of Joseph H. H. of Jacksonville, Fla., for 8 years Deputy Sheriff of Waldo County.

RODOLPH MEDICINE CO., BROOKS, ME.

GENTLEMEN:—Last February I was taken sick with La Grippe and was confined to my bed for over two weeks. After getting around again I had a terrible cough, raised a large amount and was extremely weak and emaciated. Both lungs seemed to me to be badly ulcerated. I was in terrible misery day and night when my physician advised me to try Rodolphi's New Medical Discovery, saying he had seen wonderful results from its use in the distressing after-effects of La Grippe, when it seemed to thoroughly eradicate the ill effects of the disease. The first bottle removed the feeling of weakness and depression; my cough became much better, lungs cleared up, appetite returned, and I was able to go out of doors on pleasant days. By its continued use I have fully recovered and think I feel even better and have done more work this fall than last. I am 69 years old and feel now as though I was good for as many years more.

POLES AND SIDEWALKS.

They are having a good deal of trouble in Dedham over the erection of telephone poles, and Mr. Putnam, the superintendent of streets, does not mince matters in speaking of them. The company are establishing an exchange in Dedham, and began its work of erecting poles the other day. Two poles had been put up, when Mr. Putnam stopped further work. He says the poles are dirty and crooked and not such poles as the company agreed to put up. In his opinion, as well as that expressed by leading citizens, the streets of Dedham are already too much disfigured by crooked and unsightly poles. From this on telephone and telegraph companies are to be made to live to the very letter of any agreement made with the town.

The straight poles are more expensive, and the companies who pay for them prefer to use the cheapest poles possible. The action of Dedham is to be commended, however, as even the best of poles are a disfigurement to the streets. Here in Newton there are many complaints, both as to the character of poles and as to the way in which they encroach upon the sidewalks, which are none too wide at the best.

We have received numerous complaints lately in regard to the West End trolley poles on Centre street, which instead of being placed on the edge of the sidewalk, encroach upon it to the inconvenience of pedestrians. One of them sets in over a foot and a half from the edge of the walk, and the residents are asking who permitted such a location. The huge telephone poles in that vicinity are a decided nuisance, as they take up a large part of the narrow sidewalk, on one of the most frequented streets, and the trolley poles seem to be the last straw, and there is a loud call for the highway committee to visit the spot. The residents say they can understand, also, that a trolley pole should lean one way, but they see no reason for its leaning two ways, and they think the poles must have been set very hurriedly.

The city of Lynn has recently passed an ordinance for the burial of all telephone and electric light wires, and it would add much to the beauty of Newton if such an arrangement could be made here. The corporations using the poles pay no rental to the city for such a disfigurement of the streets, and the Telephone company charges the city a large price every year for telephones, so that there is no reason why any great consideration should be shown, especially in the way of allowing them to put up cheap and unsightly poles, or to encroach on the sidewalks. If this thing keeps on we shall soon have to abandon the sidewalks to the different kinds of poles, give up the streets to the electric railway companies, and go across lots, when we want to take a walk. When all sorts of street franchises have been given away to private corporations, the people may wake up to the fact that the streets were designed for the use and convenience of private citizens.

It sounds odd to be told that Mexico is on a sounder financial basis than the United States, but this is what a prominent citizen of that country, who is a close student of the affairs of the world, says, and he gives some weighty reasons for his assertion. He thinks that not all the trouble is caused by silver, which is natural in a Mexican, where silver is so great a portion of the currency, but he says:

"Look over the world's recent history, the Panama swindle, the Australian attempt to create a great nation by hot-house culture, the Argentine bootless pit for European capital, and the American juggling with the laws of trade by the adoption of the McKinley tariff—is there not here a sufficient list of contributing causes to the present universal crash? You had better stop buying silver to coin it, and, in some way, get something better than promises to pay (government bonds) behind your national bank circulation, and then settle down to plain, non-kite-flying business. You have not enough hard money behind your enormous business transactions; there is too much paper—bankers' and merchants' credits, bits of paper variously called, behind your transactions—there is nothing solid to it all. I am no silver fanatic, but believe that there is plenty of room for the natural, unforced output of silver in the growing trade of the world."

Then he contrasts this condition of affairs to the advantage of Mexico, and gives this highly colored condition of affairs in that country:

"Here we are as contented as possible;

we have hard silver dollars, no failures, corn ripening in the fields, and public and private frugality and no disposition to speculate in anything. There is no mania to get rich overnight. It costs about a fifth part of the American army expenses to maintain the Mexican army, which is, after all, our country road-guard and general police force—not a force for the suppression of popular liberty, as is too often believed. In the States you are as mad as hares (March ones) and have a 22-story house resting on promises to pay! No wonder you are periodically rocked by financial storms. If the States had had two years of bad harvest and a sharp decline in the value of its chief exportable article, such as silver is here, you would have a ten times worse panic. Mexico is on a financially sounder basis than the States.

Mr. EDWARD C. BUTLER, son of the famous missionary who resides at Newton Centre, has been appointed secretary of the United States legation at Mexico. Mr. Butler is thoroughly experienced in diplomatic work, and has a remarkable command of the Spanish language. He has been connected with the legation seven years, beginning under Gen. Jackson of Georgia.

At first it seemed incredible to the American residents in Mexico, according to a special despatch, that the United States government was finally disposed to give an important place in a Spanish-speaking country to a man who knew the language and was entirely competent, such action being entirely out of the line of precedent, places being usually bestowed on politicians without capacity or on young men having a political pull.

Mr. Butler has done a vast deal of work in the legation for several years, and the appointment is regarded as evidence that the Washington government has, in selecting this Massachusetts man, decided to depart from its immemorial tradition of sending untrained men to occupy important posts.

It seems now to be considered as practically settled that the Republican ticket will be Pillsbury and Wolcott. The Boston Transcript, which has been pushing Mr. Wolcott for the first place, concedes that Mr. Wolcott is no longer a candidate for the first place, but the Springfield Republican adds to the Transcript's comments the following:

"It is evident that the mouthpiece of Mr. Wolcott's closest friends is not telling all it knows. Not all of the councilors, if any of them, were cognizant of a purpose on the part of the lieutenant-governor not to be a candidate for promotion. In fact the lieutenant-governor appears to have been as reticent with them as with the general public, and the councilors enlisted for Mr. Pillsbury just as the members of Congress did—because they consider him to be the strongest man for the party to nominate. But however that may be, it is safe to conclude that Mr. Wolcott will have to take second place or nothing, unless Oct 7 brings with it a great surprise."

A RECENT number of the GRAPHIC contained an article on the fire alarm system of Los Angeles, which had been condemned by the Pacific Insurance Union, which was a mixed system and was found not to work properly. A prominent official of the Municipal company says that the system was composed of boxes put in by the Richmond Company, and the Inter-State Company, and a few Municipal boxes, but the Inspector while condemning the other boxes said that those of the Municipal Company were entirely satisfactory.

The neighboring cities are making returns of their tax rate, and most of them are over $16. Cambridge and Lowell citizens will both pay $16.40, Brookline has only $11, this year, but the real estate owners there pay more proportionately than those of Newton, owing to the very high value placed on the land by the assessors. Mr. H. M. Salmonstall explained it at the Boulevard hearing by saying that the land in Brookline was marked up every year.

MAYOR MATTHEWS of Boston has recovered sufficiently to leave the hospital, and has gone to New Hampshire. It is positively announced that he will not be a candidate for governor on the Democratic ticket, and that he will also refuse to serve again as mayor, as his health will not permit. The Democracy will now have to look up other candidates for these offices.

THE city treasurer has received many responses from citizens who have money to loan, and a good deal has been taken in this week. Evidently there is money enough in Newton, and lending it to the city at six per cent is as safe a use as could be made of it.

THE friends of ex-Congressman Greenhaige are making more stir lately and are talking with more confidence. Mr. Farquhar gave a dinner to the witty ex-Congressman yesterday, at his residence in this city and in the evening a large number of neighbors and friends gathered informally to meet the distinguished guest. Mr. Farquhar is one of the warmest supporters of Mr. Greenhaige.

SENATOR HOAR thinks a bill for the unconditional repeal of the Sherman bill will pass both the house and the senate within a short time, in spite of the silver men, although he anticipates trouble in the senate from the Republican senators of the silver states.

NEWTON IS HAPPY.

HER BUSINESS INTERESTS SUFFERING BUT LITTLE AT PRESENT.

The manufacturing industries in Newton apparently feel the effects of the present financial and business depression, although the principal mills, the Silver Lake cordage and the Nonantum worsted, employing some 1500 hands, have met with no reverses in the shape of lessened orders for goods. The latter has a large number of orders ahead. It shut down for a few days in order to make some necessary repairs and to put a new 3000-horse power engine in position, but resumed with its full complement of workers in the several departments.

Phipps & Train's silk mills at the Upper Falls is running on half-time. The Newton Rubber Company has been operating its plant on a five-day basis for the past few weeks, and has now shut down for a fortnight. The Game well Fire Alarm Company has closed its large factory at the Upper Falls for a couple of weeks, but not because of any lack of business. The shut down was decided upon in order to give all the hands an opportunity to get a vacation and to put the engine and machinery in first-class condition.

Some of the smaller factories and mills have shut down indefinitely, and, as a result, about 300 men and women have been thrown out of employment. Some of them have secured other positions in Newton and surrounding communities. The situation in Newton, so far as the wage earners is concerned, is considered quite encouraging, especially when it is considered that it has been found necessary in many places to considerably decrease the number of hands employed in the hands of the large factories, the general business interests suffering as a result of the hard times.

The city's financial condition is all right, the money is being paid into the city treasury in part by citizens who are perfectly willing to make loans to furnish funds for pressing requirements. This helps of especial advantage just now, as it will enable the city to float its bonds later at the customary rate of interest.

Lasell Notes.

Mrs. Bragdon has returned from Cot tage City.

Mrs. Keyes came back on Monday from North Andover, where she has been resting and visiting for a few weeks.

The residence of Mr. and Mrs. John Bland of West Newton, the scene of a brilliant wedding on the evening of Aug. 10th. The contracting parties were Miss Annie L. Cooper, a niece of the host, and Mr. Lewis Robinson, one of the highly esteemed and well known employees of Lasell. The strains of a well rendered wedding march ushered in the bride party. The bride wore an elegant white and orange dress, and the ceremony was impressively performed by Rev. Mr. L. W. formerly of West Newton. Auburn and other friends at Lasell. There were also acquaintances from Boston besides the friends in West Newton. The presents were very numerous and elegant. Mr. and Mrs. Robinson will occupy a beautiful new cottage built expressly for them on the Seminary grounds.

FRENCH WOMEN JOURNALISTS.

Some Are Ranked Among the Notables of Paris—Their Work and Manners.

The newspaper women of France are comparatively few. They are constantly accused of a total lack of the critical faculty and of a want of perception of the ridiculous. Furthermore, their ideas on ethics and philosophy are said to be "stale." Nevertheless it is true that their contributions to magazines and periodicals are impatiently awaited and widely read, after which many of the masculine writers go into mental convulsions and tear their vocabularies in tatters in trying to prove that these feminine effusions were worse than worthless.

The women who, in spite of this, persist in writing do not have sinecures. Not long ago at a celebrated criminal trial a woman journalist presented herself at the court as the judiciary reporter of a leading morning newspaper in Paris. The police are said to have been agitated when Mme. Severine drew forth her pad and pencil and demanded admission to the press tables. The guards were somewhat taken aback, and, with a deplorable lack of French chivalry, wanted to turn her away. But, by wit or wiles of some sort, she gained her point and cleared a pathway for all women reporters who shall come after her.

Mme. Edmond Adam is another woman journalist, perhaps the leading one in Paris. She is a politician, author and editor. She has been honored by the municipality of Paris in having her name given to one of the streets of the capital, an honor rarely bestowed on a person during her lifetime. It isn't much of a street, to be sure, the Rue Juliette Lamber but it is young and may grow some day. Under Napoleon III Mme. Adam had a salon in opposition to the imperial government, and there she reigned. She was young and handsome then, with soft, pretty hair and bright blue eyes. She was an intense republican and a great friend of Garibaldi. At the close of the Franco-Prussian war she had no one in France to particularly oppose, so she selected Bismarck. Such phrases as these have been attributed to her: "Bismarck and me!" "Bismarck was to have been overthrown by me!" "At last the czar condescends to follow my political views!" She is a good speaker and can talk on almost any subject. Her dinners are decidedly interesting. One-fourth of her guests are usually officers of the French army, another fourth is composed of political men, and the others are artists and literary people. The dinners are usually followed by receptions, which are attended by cabinet ministers, deputies, senators, diplomats and journalists. There are, except on special occasions, few women.

Mme. Severine is both more valiant and more sentimental than Mme. Adam. Severine, as she is familiarly called, is a well known figure in Paris. She has been nicknamed Mamezelle Gargoyne and Jenny L'Ouvriere, and although she is much given to literary floods of tears, she writes vigorously and well. She has her own particular conceptions of good and evil. Severine inhabits her political views from The Cri du Peuple (The Voice of the People), and Mme. Adam drinks of the fountain of La Republique Francaise, founded by Gambetta. Severine's ambition is to secure the abolition of capital punishment.

Mme. Yver is a curious figure in the newspaper world. She frequents the prefecture of police, and is remarkable for her persistent praise of the police and the justice they dispense. "Good," in her mind, is represented by the prefect of police, the detectives and the gendarmes, but never by the prisoners. Gyp is another woman journalist, but her name—Mme. de Martel—is better known in connection with novels on Parisian high life and as author of a few comedies. She is a noted contributor, in a very light vein, to that lively publication, La Vie Parisienne. Gyp is popular, and, besides being a writer of great talent, paints with success.

Perhaps the most successful newspaper women in Paris are those who write about the thing they know best—fashions. But men are encroaching somewhat upon this territory, and altogether woman's place in French journalism is not all that could be desired.—New York Sun.

Why Is It?

Why is it that a woman can struggle until she is red in the face and worn out both in temper and body by a window in a railroad train in her vain endeavors to close or open it when all that a man has to do is to walk up and go over exactly the same line of action that she has already exhausted, and down comes the refractory window in a jiffy? It is a most humiliating fact, but a very true one nevertheless, that not five women out of a dozen ever succeed in arranging a window to their satisfaction. They pull and tug until they are embarrassed, and finally, in a pleading manner, look around at some slip of a man, who, without any nonsense, brings about the desired effect, while the woman looks on in silent wonder at his marvelous skill and dexterity.—Philadelphia Times.

Birds Enjoy a Shower Bath.

A friend reports a pretty incident. During the hot, dry weather the birds about her house were apparently much in need of bathing places, and the lady discovered that every day when she went out to water her flowers a little bird hovered about as if he wanted something. Presently he revealed what he did want by getting under the sprinkling of the water pot or beneath the dripping plants, and fluffing his feathers in this shower bath just as he would in a pool, and plainly enjoying it in the highest degree. He began to watch for the daily coming of the lady to water her plants and gave himself up to his bath with gay abandon.—Boston Transcript.

—The police station guard room has been given its customary seasoning of oiling and varnishing preparatory to the beginning of the winter work.

—Charles E. Colton of Waltham has been given a conductor's position on the electric railway here and commenced work Tuesday.

—The Worcester local freight jumped the tracks at the freight yard Wednesday evening and the tracks were partly blocked, the passenger service, however, being very little affected, the trains running both ways with one exception without delay. It required over two hours work to straighten matter out.

—There was a swimming match Monday night from Fox Island to the Canoe club house, the conditions being that the last two to arrive at the canoe club float should pay for supper at Marliave's French Restaurant in Boston on Saturday night.

The contestants were Teddy Pepper, Homer Whiting, Eddie Phillips, Harry Clark and W. V. Hyde. The last two will pay for supper.—Waltham Tribune.

—City Treasurer Kenrick has received several additional checks this week from citizens who will be paid 6 per cent interest on their loans. The total amount raised in that way is about $50,000.

—The Newton Veteran Firemen's Association won fourth prize in the tournament at Worcester, yesterday. Its hand some engine "Nonantum," was fifth in the list to play and made a fine record, that of 150 feet, 4-3-4 inches. The prize money secured was $50. The representation of fire ladders from this city numbered 100 men and there was besides a delegation of about twenty-five Newton citizens. Waltham finished tenth in the list.

—There are advertised letters at the post office for Miss Maggie Boyd, Mr. Blackwell, Buck, Long & Co., D. M. Clifford, Mr. Campbell, Miss Mary Carter, Mr. Martha Fay, E. A. Henderson, A. W. Johnson, Joseph W. Jones, John Lannigan, Mrs. Wm. H. Lord, James McLellan, James Murphy, John McJongle, Miss McLaughlin, Mr. E. S. Newman, H. —A ten-year-old child was severely stung on the neck and face by hornets, the other day, while gathering apples in an orchard. Her screams brought a neighbor, who relieved the pain by some remedy within two minutes. Old residents can remember when the stings of hornets, if numerous, resulted in complete prostration or death.

—Two young women residing in a lodging house, 20 Crescent street, Nonantum district, reported the loss of money and other valuables at police headquarters last Friday, and an investigation is being prosecuted which may lead to an arrest with, possibly, some sensational features. The story is that $25 in bank notes and a gold ring was stolen from the apartment of Mary Wilson and from the room of Addie Griffin, a gold ring and $35 in gold. There are very peculiar circumstances connected with the case which makes it somewhat puzzling.

—Loyalty Lodge of Good Templars held a rousing good meeting, Wednesday evening. Large delegations from Victor Lodge of Allston, of Charlestown, of Nonantum, and Crystal River of Watertown were present. The visiting members helped to make the session a very interesting and enjoyable one by readings, recitations, etc. The meeting showed that even in the hot weather, Good Templars are alive to the interests of the temperance cause, and here it may be said that Loyalty Lodge takes no vacation, but every Wednesday evening finds its members in session, trying to do what they can to better the cause of temperance. In a short time the Lodge will commence a series of Sunday afternoon public meetings in City Hall, similar to the successful meetings held a couple of years ago. Due notice will be given of the same.

FINE CONVENT BUILDING.

TO BE USED IN CONNECTION WITH PAROCHIAL SCHOOL AT NEWTON.

In connection with the new parochial school building which has been erected on Adams street, a convent has been put up on a lot adjoining the latter entirely at the expense of Rev. Michael Dolan, rector of the parish of the Church of Our Lady.

It is a substantial brick structure with accommodations for the sisters who will teach in the school. It contains, besides the equipment of rooms, a beautiful chapel, which has been finished in the most artistic manner. The altar, of marble and Mexican onyx, is one of the finest in the diocese. One of the features in the chapel is a painting of the "Rising of Lazarus."

Yesterday the 10 Sisters of Charity who will occupy the convent and take charge of the educational work of the school arrived from New Jersey. They were formerly attached to the Catholic University in that state. They were given an informal reception by the ladies of the parish of the Church of Our Lady last evening.

The new parochial school and convent buildings represent an outlay of nearly $100,000. The school structure contains eight rooms and a large hall. The material used in the construction is brick with sandstone trimmings. The interior fittings are excellent, and the sanitary and ventilating apparatus first class. The buildings will be heat by steam. The boiler and necessary plant for heating are located in a separate small brick building.

There yet remains some work to be done before the buildings are ready for occupancy. The labor ahead, however, partakes largely of the character of decorations. The dedication ceremonies will occur, probably, during the latter part of September.

A TIME TO "SAW WOOD."

WISE MEN SAY NOTHING AND LOOK ABOUT FOR CHANCES.

(From the Kansas City Journal.)

It is the man who industriously "saws wood" who arrives at the objective point with the greatest degree of certainty. It is the individual who is always getting ready to make money who does most of the talking in the world. The man who is never seen on the street corners discussing grave public questions is the one who is making the best of the situation and is doing something to keep the wheels moving. If he has steady employment, he does his work as well as he can, tries to make good use of his income, and finds that he has no time for grumbling.

If he is dependent upon his own efforts for the employment of his time, he is looking around for the main chance, knowing full well that in times like these that the man who "saws wood" is most likely to come out on top. It is the head of the procession when the agitation is at its height and those who have taken their time to do the talking finally turn their attention to business. This does not apply to the class of carbuncle prophets who are never known to toil, spin or look with favor upon anything save an invitation to draw the saws at the nearest bar. Then we always have to go further now in buying, building and almost anything else than at any previous time in the history of the West. They who "saw wood" will be counted as the wise ones of the period.

Ancient Girdles.

Ancient girdles were in some respects like the chateauxes not long ago so much the rage among the ladies, but they differed therefrom in being more useful, more comprehensive in regard both to sex and to articles worn, and when completely furnished more costly. It is partly for this last reason that we find girdles bequeathed as precious heirlooms and as valuable presents to keep the giver's memory green after death. They were not infrequently of great intrinsic value. One of King John's girdles was wrought with gold and adorned with gems, and that of the widow of Sir Thomas Hungerford, bequeathed in 1504 to the mother church of Worcester, was of green color harnessed with silver and richly jeweled.

Not a few wealthy commoners were able to afford the luxury of gold embellished belts and were not superior to that pardonable vanity so long as no regulation prohibited them. Those who have studied our social history will not be surprised to learn that enactments were passed restraining them. Edward III forbade any person under the degree of a knight from wearing girdles, gilt or silver, unless he should happen to be an esquire of substance valued at more than £200, when a reasonable embellishment was tolerated. Henry IV confirmed this regulation, but it does not seem to have been stringently enforced, for Edward IV was constrained to impose a penalty of 40 pence upon the wives of servants and laborers who should have the pertinence to aspire to be as good as their masters' spouses.—Chambers' Journal.

Making the Most of Household Pets.

Whatever beast is kept it should have its own quarters in which it is at home and free from intrusion and to which it can retire when it chooses. This home should be kept clean and sweet by frequent changes of bedding and the use of soap and water. No one has a right to keep an animal in confinement who finds it too much trouble to attend to its health and comfort. It should be regularly fed on food that is most healthful for it, and what is quite as essential to its happiness and consequently to its health, it should be talked to and noticed as much as any body.

I am certain many animals and birds suffer and die in our homes from pure loneliness and from being regarded by their human neighbors as creatures of an altogether different nature. Whereas the truth is, if one will but cultivate their acquaintance, he will be astonished to see how the dumbest and most stupid will wake out of its apparent torpor and show understanding and character.

I know a family very fond of pets, in which the creatures show most extraordinary individuality. Their cats do things no cat was ever before known to do; their parrots and other birds show what we call human nature in a wonderful degree, and their dogs almost talk. The reason is plain; the animal or bird is made one of the family. It is talked to and petted as well as cared for. Its intelligence develops, and the beast becomes very like the human being.—Olive Thorne Miller in Harper's Bazar.

A Glean of Sunshine.

I stood in the great courtyard of Sing Sing prison two days before the famous escape of Roehl and Pallister. The genial keeper had shown us everything and everybody of the hundreds of prisoners save the fatal five in the condemned cells. We had seen the workshops, the dining room, the tiny sleeping apartments, the chapel painted by a convict's pencil with scenes from the "Prodigal Son." As we turned to go away the attendant called to me:

"Look yonder."

There was a little girl, the daughter of an official of the prison, surrounded by three men in stripes. How they kissed her innocent face and almost worshiped her as she stood among them with the sunlight playing around her slender form!

"Strange thing, sir, but these fellows do so love children!" said the keeper. "If we only let them play where the prisoners can see them, they will watch them by the hour and spend days in making little toys for them. Ay," continued he, "and robins, mice, rats, anything alive, they will catch, tame and cherish."

The scene in the grim, gaunt prison was a fascinating one. As the great iron gate creaked behind us I turned and looked again. The group was still there, gilded by the April sunlight.—New York Ledger.

A Cyclist Catches a Train.

"We have all seen men run for a train," said a traveler. "The other day I saw a man make a break for one on a bicycle. We had halted at a station from which a straight, level road ran back at a right angle to the railroad. At a considerable distance up that road we saw a man coming on a bicycle. A man afoot couldn't have got anywhere near us from that distance, and it didn't seem as though the man on the wheel could get within rods of us, but he came down the street whizzing. When he had come about half the distance, the conductor gave the signal to start, and the engineer sounded the whistle and started the train. It was astonishing how fast the man on the wheel was coming now. There was a broad, level space around the station. The bicyclist swept over this in a great curve that landed him alongside the baggage car. Dismounting, he lifted his wheel up to the waiting hands of the baggage-master. A fraction of a second later the steps of the first passenger car came along, and the bicyclist stepped aboard a winner."—New York Sun.

About How He Felt.

Mr. and Mrs. Fitts were out driving. "I wonder," said she, "just what the poor horse's feelings are? It must be just horrid to be driven and dragged around, without any idea as to where one is going, except as some one directs." "I fancy I can appreciate his feelings," replied Mr. Fitts calmly. "I imagine he feels just about as I do when you take me out on a shopping trip."—London Tit-Bits.

BABY'S SONG.

Swing in her hammock here,
Under green trees,
Swinging so languidly,
Lulled by the breeze.

Softly with silken cords Baby is tied;
One little dimpled foot
Straying outside.

Beauty lies lavishly Fashion her face;
Rosy blooms blushing Touched with grace.

Down through the orchard boughs Comes the soft air,
Tenderly kisses her,
Plays with her hair.

Perched on an apple bough,
Bending above,
Swings a sweet oriole,
Singing of love.

Hushed are the katydids,
Hid in the grass,
Listening as Brownie folks
Sing as they pass.

Here comes a honey bee
From his retreat,
Drowsily humming home,
Heavy with sweet.

Softly some drowsy god
Closes her eyes,
Fair as forget-me-nots
Under blue skies.

Walking in Wonderland, Baby's asleep,
Dreaming of Brownie folks
Or of Bo-Peep.

A TYPEWRITER GIRL.

There was weeping and wailing and gnashing of teeth in the St. Clair household.

Caroline, the youngest daughter, had decided to carve her own fortunes, as those of the family were getting in a most entangled condition, and "unknown" to her worthy relatives had bought and secured a position as typewriter in one of big, wicked Chicago's well known business houses.

"It's a disgrace to the family!" Brother Bob declared, and he donned his overcoat and repaired to the clubhouse around the corner. Mamma wept loudly; papa fumed faintly.

"John Vandergast!" moaned mamma. "He will never look at you again! A daughter of mine a typewriter!"

Caroline's short upper lip curled slightly more than already curled by nature, although an apprehensive look did come into her great hazel eyes.

"If you think, my dearest mother, that I am going to starve here in this remote quarter of the woods, even in the most genteel style, just for a look from Mr. Vandergast, you are vastly mistaken."

"There are other employments for a woman—such a public position! And typewriters are always so—so talk about!"

"In the newspapers," added Caroline. "But no one will ever talk about me!" she finished, with stern bravery.

Before it was time for Caroline to leave for the distant city her father had altogether ceased his fuming and was considering the advantages of his daughter's assistance. Of late years the struggle had been a hard one for him. His wife had always been a society woman and extravagant; indulged sons and fashionable daughters, whose marriages had each cost him a small fortune, had so reduced the estate made in his prime that now, in his old age, bankruptcy constantly stared him in the face.

"I regret, daughter," he said as the train whistled and they were out on the station platform, "that you are going so far from home. But I know how you would feel to begin labor here, and I fully appreciate your efforts in assisting me. The burden is growing heavier with every year," and he sighed.

"Somebody has to do something," returned the daughter sentimentally. "And I know you are fully capable of taking care of yourself. God bless you, my girl."

And the careworn father was ponder of his typewriter girl that of his wealthiest and most beautiful daughter.

But once on the car and steaming Chicagoward Caroline was not quite so brave, and despite her tall, dignified self one or two tears rolled down her aristocratic nose and defied the superior little curl of her short upper lip.

"What if John Vandergast—they had been such friends before he left for Europe, and although Caroline had not given her promise, for she was not sure of herself, she had consented to speak with him again upon the subject when he would return.

Now she was sure of herself—but John?

"It is one more test!" she said sternly to herself as she brushed away the impudent tears, "and a good one too. I am so glad I defied mamma and took the business course at college."

In the excitement of her new life Caroline forgot her little thoughts that might have been called sentiment. She passed the ordeal of critical examination by the other typewriters in the office with supreme indifference and so impressed her employers with her dignity that they were half afraid of her.

As a typewriter she was invaluable—rapid, correct, distinct, her every sheet perfect itself, but there was no social intercourse nor pleasant conversation. "That girl," declared the junior partner, "actually scares me. She's too pretty to be such a prude."

"Ye-es," drawled the senior, and that afternoon the venerable gentleman asked her how she spent her evenings.

"Sir?" inquired Caroline. "You—excuse me, but you are young and not homey, and you will pardon an old man if he takes an interest in your welfare in this great city."

"Ah, yes!" Caroline drew a long, expressive breath, and a close observer would have said that her nostrils dilated something like those of a high strung horse. "Sunday evening I attended services at St. James; Monday evening I devoted to literature, Emerson, Carlyle and Renan being my favorite authors; Tuesday evening I attended the musicals, and Wednesday evening I attend prayers; Thursday evening I again devote to reading; Friday evening I generally attend the opera or concert, and Saturday evening I give to preparations for the Sabbath."

Then she turned to her Remington, and the old gentleman groaned in an aside. Caroline was flushed and wrathful.

"The old sinner!" she was fuming to herself as she took his dictation in shorthand. "As though he thought I could not understand!"

Caroline was past 30 and considered capable of taking care of herself, yet she felt as injured and insulted as though the white haired man had ogled her as he did the youngest and most flippant girl in the house.

But Caroline did not wish to lose her position, for it was an unusually paying one, and it began to be an effort to her to repel the insinuation of the senior partner without offending him. She soon detested him most heartily.

One morning the junior partner came in very much flurried.

"Vandergast is in town," he said, and despite herself Caroline reddened and then grew pale.

"Hey? You don't say! Well, that's ducedly inconvenient just now."

"He will be looking into accounts, and we are not prepared for that at present," said the youth significantly.

"No," mused the other, and then they held a lengthy consultation, during which Caroline was on the qui vive to catch every word.

But they spoke guardedly, for all that her outward appearance was one of such indifference. Evidently it was of enough importance to not trust her fully.

"Yes," said the senior at last, "that will be the best plan. We will secure the bonds at the bank to put a good face on things, and then he will not be likely to look deeper until after the crisis. It would ruin us for him to withdraw his shares now."

All this was Greek to Caroline until she remembered several communications she had taken which were in regard to speculations, and then it was clear to her. The junior partner went at once to the bank, and the old gentleman seemed somewhat worried.

Caroline gave no sign, but she made a resolution, and when 3 o'clock, her hour for quitting work, came she said calmly: "I believe I must sever my connection with this office today. I wish to return home."

"Ah—ahem! Do I understand you mean to quit us at once?"

"Yes. I wish to return home tomorrow morning," she returned imperturbably.

"This is rather sudden. Indeed I do not see how I can let you go at once."

"But you must, sir!" said Caroline, with decision.

So he made out her check and bade her a suave goodbye, and a few minutes later found her in the hotel waiting for John Vandergast.

Whether it was her John or some other Vandergast, she had determined to warn him and then go home for a vacation until she secured another position. And when she looked on the hotel register she knew it was her John.

"Why, Caroline," he said, when he came in, his face lighting up. "This is a most unexpected honor. I was hurrying business matters so as to get home tomorrow to see you."

He shook her hand warmly and looked closely into her face to see if he might venture any further greeting.

No one would be apt to take even a lover's liberty with Caroline.

"You have made my stay a long one and a tedious one to me by denying me the privilege of writing to you," he said in reproach.

"Yes, I know, John," she rejoined hastily, for she was afraid her blushes might encourage an embrace, "but you know I am a typewriter now, or was an hour ago." And she looked at him defiantly. He laughed.

"I understood in one of my letters from home that you had accepted some position here in the city, but I could not learn where or what it was. I am sure you are the same if not more to me for that. Typewriters are a fine set of girls."

An unmistakable satisfaction came into Caroline's face.

"I am—so glad you do not think less of me than you did," she said, under her breath. Then she recollected her errand.

She told him what she knew, and he listened with a grave face.

"I am glad you told me. It is providential you were employed there. So they are speculating, and from what you tell me my thousands would have been higher than the moon by day after tomorrow. I will withdraw them for you, my queen, this very day."

Then as there was not a minute to lose Caroline bade him goodbye and hurried to her boarding house. The next morning she was homeward bound, John Vandergast's promise bride.

Several months later there was a quiet wedding in the St. Clair homestead, and the typewriter daughter was the highest honored of the worldly mother had.—Belle V. Logan in Chicago News.

Two Great Composers.

Dr. Hauslick once asked Schumann how he got on with Wagner.

"Not at all," replied Schumann; "for me Wagner is impossible. Doubtless he is a very clever man, but he talks too fast—one cannot get a word in."

Some time after, in an interview which Hauslick had with Wagner, allusion was made to Schumann.

"With Schumann," said Wagner, "it is impossible to arrive at an understanding. He says nothing. Some years ago on my return from Paris I called upon him to talk of operas, concerts, composers and other interesting matter with which I had become acquainted. Schumann looked at me stolidly, or rather he looked into space, without saying a word. Faith, I took leave of him almost immediately. He is an impossible man."—London Tit-Bits.

INDIAN PIG STICKING.

ONE MAN WHO SAYS IT IS THE FINEST SPORT IN THE WORLD.

How the Wild Boars of the Jungles of India and Northern Africa Are Hunted by Enthusiastic Sportsmen of Other Countries—Plenty of Danger.

As an ardent pig sticker I may be forgiven for advancing the opinion that it is the finest sport in the world. By "pig sticking" I of course mean pig sticking as it is practiced in India and in northern Africa and perhaps in some other English colonies—viz, riding down the pig on horseback and dispatching him with spears.

The Indian wild pig varies naturally according to his home. The biggest I have ever seen were in the Vindhya mountains, where I used to shoot them as food for my beaters. Sometimes they were of vast size, bigger, I think, than even their Ganges cousins.

A peculiarity of the wild pig is the straightness of his tail as compared with the curled appendage of his domestic brother. From the top of his low forehead to the end of his snout is almost a perfectly straight line, and he has a far longer snout and jaw than the English market pig. His skin is a kind of bluish gray and his bristles gray or black, though sometimes an almost brown pig is found. The wild pig will never live far from water. He is happiest in the long grass, often 12 feet high, that grows along the banks of the big Indian rivers, and above all rejoices in "jao," a kind of evergreen brushwood that is as common as the grass. He only eats at night, and about 10 p. m. he sallies forth from cover and will go many miles to find the succulent sugar cane or other luxury, returning as a rule about an hour before the first streaks of dawn.

Pig sticking begins usually about Christmas week, when the giant vegetation of the rains has died down sufficiently to get at piggy, and the marshy ground where he lives is firm enough for horses, but it is not till the end of February that really good pig sticking begins, and it improves as the weather gets dryer and hotter till the June rains come, and pig sticking instantly ceases.

At about 6 a. m., after a light breakfast, the sportsmen set out—usually in "tumtums"—to the meet, having sent their spears and horses on ahead over night, together with the all important mess tiffin basket, in which a huge block of ice and innumerable soda water bottles and beer bottles figure largely. It is rare to gather together more than 12 men. It may have been different in olden times, but polo is a formidable rival to pig sticking nowadays, and the ordinary British sportsman can rarely afford time and money for both. Indeed, from my own experience, I should say the average field was not above five, and personally, I much prefer, except from the social point of view, very few companions.

The officer in command divides the party, if large enough, into little sections of three, and each section separates from the other and keeps together all day, either at one end of the line or in the middle. The coolies are usually about 50 in number and form line, covering about 200 yards of ground. Each is armed, or should be, with a big stick, and the end men carry flags, which can be seen above the long grass, and help to keep the coolies in line. Behind them marches on each wing one of the shikari's satellites, and in the center is the shikari himself on horseback, and these officers, like sergeants, keep the line straight, and exhort, often in language more forcible than polite, the apathetic coolies to strenuous exertions. The sportsmen generally ride a few yards in advance of the line, unless, from the nature of the covert, the pig is likely to break back.

A pig lies usually in a kind of form like a hare and will sometimes let a man or horse almost tread on him before moving, and being often covered with mud or dust is very difficult to see in the grass and weeds. When, however, he does jump up, he slips along at an incredible speed for the first 30 or 40 yards and then settles down to a very fast gallop. I have known boars at once on being put up make straight for the first man or horse they see before they have been wounded or touched, and, as all know, the task of the wild boar tusk is like a razor, though luckily the wound is usually a healthy, clean cut—very different from a mauling by the fetid claws of a tiger or leopard or the thrust of a stag's horn.

Wherever a pig gets up one of the sections go after it, and there are various little rules as to how the pig should be attacked and in what order. The most important rule is never to drop your spear, still less throw it at the pig, as some beginners have been known to do. Spears are weighted with lead at the handle, and when dropped from the hand the lighter, naturally sticks up, so that the next horseman or beater may be wounded. I know of several horrible accidents that have happened in this way.

The man who first draws blood gets "the first spear" and is entitled to the carcass. The body is given to the coolies to eat, and the head is taken home by the triumphant sportsman to adorn his bungalow hall, or the tusks are taken out and made into some knickknack. Of course he is in honor bound to help fairly kill as well as prick his foe, but it is the second horseman, riding perhaps four lengths behind him, who has the most dangerous part to play. A pig when wounded rarely pursues his former course, and the leader often loses touch with him, while his follower has to bear the full brunt of a terrific charge. It is fatal to receive a boar's charge at a walk or trot. One cannot go too fast—not straight at the pig, but at a slight angle to him as he charges.

In Bombay a long spear is used, and the boar is stuck by an "underhand" thrust. In eastern Bengal a jabbing spear is used and is more deadly, I think. Of course it is unlawful to stick sows. They cannot fight well, having no tusks. —Bally's Magazine.

A View of the Common Herd.

The society journal Vogue has as one of its correspondents an alleged member of the "Four Hundred," who writes as follows: "What is the attraction yearly at the horse show, which is always jammed to the doors? The horses? No. Society in the boxes, and the people cheerfully pay their money to be able to gaze at the beings so far removed from them, constituting an inner circle. It was this feeling which caused Broadway to be choked with a howling mob on the day of the wedding of Miss Bradley-Martin to the Earl of Craven, and it is this same impulse which prompts the crowds in the upper tiers at the opera and in the orchestra stalls to spend the time of the intermissions in gazing around the house at the fashionables as if they were waxwork from Mme. Tussaud's or the Elen Musee and following them up by aid of the little printed list on the bill, whereby each box owner is conveniently numbered and catalogued.

"We stand as royalty does abroad, and we are prepared for this homage. Those who cannot see us read of us, but unfortunately frequently through the medium of writers who commence their observations in the style of one who a few years ago started his paragraph in this way, 'I dropped in at Mrs. Astor's last night,' and evoked, consequently, the pungent reflection of Mr. Joseph Howard, Jr., a writer of the people, who evidently knew his man:

"Dropped in at Mrs. Astor's! Good heavens! for what—the ash barrel?"

Washington's Cabin.

There are few buildings that attract the admirers of Washington that have more of interest in them than a decaying cabin which stands alone in an old pasture field a half mile from Berryville, in the beautiful Shenandoah valley of Virginia.

The old cabin was the home of Washington when he was a surveyor. He came here direct from the maternal roof to begin the arduous and at the time dangerous work of surveying the lands of Thomas, Lord Fairfax, who owned all the northern part of Virginia under the king's patent. The work was arduous because of the physical aspect of the country, then a dense wilderness, and dangerous because of the character of the inhabitants, who were principally Indians or scarcely less wild trappers or squatters upon his lordship's domain.

Washington had been selected by the nobleman because of his belief in the youth's ability to cope with these elements early in 1748, just after the completion of his sixteenth year, his only companion being George William Fairfax, nephew of old Lord Thomas.

Whether these boys erected the building or found it already in place history does not state, but well authenticated tradition says that they built it themselves. That they used it for an office, kept their instruments there and slept in the upper room there is ample proof. —Washington Post.

Cementing the Russian Empire.

The czar of Russia shows undoubted sagacity in adopting the best physical means to hold together his vast empire. He has pushed the transsiberian railway southeastward until it has almost reached the frontiers of British India and China, the two powers most likely to dispute with him the acquisition of further dominion in Central Asia. Having thus assured the safety of the Russian position in the southeast, he has undertaken a more stupendous work in beginning the construction of an unbroken line of railway to connect European Russia with a port on the Pacific ocean. The whole length of the Asiatic or main Siberian line is 4,800 miles.

The estimated cost is $200,000,000. The work, which is now progressing from both ends toward the center, is to be completed in about 10 years. There will then be a stretch of railway, all located upon Russian territory, about 6,000 miles in length, holding European Russia and Asiatic Russia firmly together with a continuous band of steel. Until the proposed railway running north and south to connect the two Americas shall have been built there will be nothing on earth to rival this great stretch of eastern and western railway across the Russian empire. —Omaha Bee.

Folly of Hoarding.

It is really remarkable that so many people in this country, who have funds from which they might earn a good rate of interest, persist in locking up notes in safe deposit vaults or pack them away in old stockings. Money will earn today large returns, with the best of real estate security as first class collateral to protect the lender, and yet a great many individuals, waiting for they know not what, decline to take advantage of what is an unusual opportunity for making money. The currency of a country is intended to circulate as evidence of credit. If it does not, it becomes absolutely useless to everybody. In a famine a community would be no better off if it locked up millions of barrels of flour than if it had none at all. The same is precisely true of money. —Washington News.

Browning to Coleridge.

Browning loaned Lord Coleridge one of his works to read, and afterward, meeting the poet, the lord chief justice said to him: "What I could understand I heartily admired, and parts ought to be immortal. But as to much of it I really could not tell whether I admired it or not, because for the life of me I could not understand it." Browning replied, "If a reader of your caliber understands 10 per cent of what I write, I think I ought to be content." —San Francisco Argonaut.

A Hard Conundrum.

Of the 1,300,000,000 or 1,400,000,000 of people populating the earth, how many may be said to dominate it? Is the direction of all affairs subliminary in the hands of more or less than 10,000 men and women? I do not mean as elected or hereditary rulers of nations merely, but persons in the capacity of rulers, financiers, priests, soldiers, writers, statesmen, etc.—Cor. New York Sun.

Sheridan's team won, the score standing 30 to 18.

—The urgency of having Ellis street rebuilt with some thought for the safety of teams visiting Echo Bridge was shown on September 4th, their annual Labor day festival. The most attractive feature connected with it was a voting contest for a handsome gold headed cane between a representative of the fire department and of the highway department of Newton. Mr. A. English represents the fire department and Mr. C. Peck represents the highway department. The contest is expected to surpass in a great measure anything of the kind heretofore held in this city, on account of the rivalry of these departments and the great popularity of those gentlemen whose many friends are working most earnestly to win the golden trophy for the gentleman of their choice. The cane will be on exhibition at Mr. J. Noble's drug store a week preceding the contest.

Generalship and Book Knowledge.

The greatest soldier who ever lived—Alexander of Macedon—though he slept with Homer under his pillow, had probably never seen a book on military art, and though Von Moltke was a student, we may be permitted to doubt if Marlborough ever was. He read only Shakespeare zealously.

Certainly in our time no able man who wanted a chief for any great undertaking of any kind would dream of asking the limits of his reading or would be able to avoid a silent prejudice against a candidate, partly unreasonable, but partly also the result of a traditionary experience, if he knew that he was in any special degree a student of books. He would think him a man apt to be misled. Indeed, in one great condition of efficiency, perhaps in practice the greatest of all conditions, we should assign to unread men—we do not mean uneducated men, but men who never voluntarily open books—a definite superiority. They are apt to choose men better. Soldiers who do not read make no mistake about their general.—London Spectator.

Rossini's Memory.

The composer of "Il Barbiere di Siviglia" was blessed with a not very retentive memory—especially for names of persons introduced to him—a forgetfulness which was frequently the cause of much merriment whenever Rossini was among company. One day he met Bishop, the English composer. Rossini knew the face well enough and at once greeted him. "Ah, my dear Mr. —," but he could progress no further. To convince him that he had not forgotten him Rossini commenced whistling Bishop's gle, "When the Wind Blows," a compliment which "the English Mozart" recognized and would as readily have heard as his less musical surname.—Gentleman's Magazine.

A Munificent Offer.

Here is a capital story of Mr. Edward Lloyd, the well known tenor. He seldom sings in private, but on one occasion, when visiting some friends a little way out, he was prevailed upon to do so. A clergyman who was present was not aware of the identity of the singer and at the conclusion of the song approached him quietly and said:

"Really, sir, you should not waste your voice like this. Now, we are in need of another tenor in our choir. I shall be very happy to give you £30 a year. Think it over."

The singer smiled and said he would—think it over.—London Tit-Bits.

Washes For Injured Eyes.

Line and Roman cement are very destructive to the eyes if permitted to remain any considerable time. Wash the eyes immediately with water, then with water containing vinegar or lemon juice. For acids in the eyes wash with water containing a little ammonia or baking soda.

An Indian Blanket.

The Indians make blankets of bark beaten very thin. The bark is stamped with fancy figures in brown and red and is trimmed with fur. Palm leaves are beaten together and are also made into blankets. An Indian is always cold, even in hot weather, and his blanket is as precious to him as our sun hats are to us.—New York Ledger.

The Abandonment of Deep Mourning.

The so called "deepest mourning" is no longer considered good form in Europe, and craps has dropped out of fashion, being now only used for draping buildings and monuments, or for shrouding the lighted lamps of the vehicles figuring in the funeral cortege. No one would ever dream of taxing either the empress of Austria or the Princess of Wales with indifference to the death of their respective sons, yet each has been content to mourn her offspring without craps, either in the shape of a veil or as a trimming to her dress. The result of this has been that widows, especially when young, dispense not only with craps, but with the characteristic cap and long streamers. Indeed, at the present rate, there will be no outward sign left by which we shall be able to distinguish from the ordinary woman those fair sirens against whom we have been so pathetically warned by Mr. Weller.—New York Tribune.

Had I but served my God with half the zeal I served my king, he would not have given me over in my gray hairs.—Cardinal Wolsey.

—S. S. Gleason has sold two lots of land on the Allison estate, California street, some 10,000 square feet each, to Martin Fahy and Daniel Healey, who intend to build some time this fall.

—The supply of peaches this year is said to be unusually large, and some fine ones are coming to Newton. The local grocers say their orders now are mostly for sugar, which indicates that the canning season has begun.

—Monday's northeast was unusually severe for August, but the cool weather and frequent rains are making the lawns and gardens very attractive. Nature is evidently getting ready for the return of the summer wanderers.

—Leslie, youngest son of Mr. Wm. W. Wood, who was very seriously injured a few days since, is quite comfortable at this writing. He is suffering from a difficult and painful fracture of the leg just below the hip, caused by the kick of a horse.

—Horace G. Crocker of Fayette street won third prize in the 1-mile handicap class in the N. C. A. bicycle race in New York last Saturday. He entered the 2-mile handicap competition, was run into and thrown from his wheel, fracturing his collar bone. He has returned home and is doing as well as could be expected.

—Wednesday morning Fred George, a driver employed by E. Jennings of Weston, milk dealer, was seriously injured as a direct result of removing the bride from a hearse. He stepped his wagon in front of Mrs. Hodgdon's restaurant, Centre street, with the idea of getting his customary morning meal, and decided to get the horse a feed at the same time. The moment the bits dropped from position, the horse started on the run and George threw both arms around the animal's neck in a vain endeavor to arrest his progress. He was tripped and fell to the ground, the wheels of the wagon passing over him. Both legs were badly bruised and the flesh torn in several places. His head was cut and his left shoulder dislocated. He was taken to his home in Weston. The horse, after making the circuit of several highways in the vicinity, was finally stopped at the corner of Court and Washington streets. The wagon was intact and the only damage was a broken harness.

—Mr. John Atwood and family of William street have returned from Vinal Haven, Me.

—Miss Nellie Fewkes of Maple street has been appointed a teacher in the Tewksbury schools.

—Dr. R. A. Reid will return next Monday from No. Scituate beach, where he has been since his return from Maine.

—Harold Hutchinson was a recent guest at the Mt. Pleasant House, White Mountains.

—Mrs. Albert Crandall is spending a few weeks with her parents, Mr. and Mrs. W. H. Gardner, Jamestown, R. I.

—Mrs. Isabella G. Parker of Auburndale will preside at the Grace church organ during the absence of Mr. H. B. Day.

—Miss Marion G. Noyes was among the guests at the Florence House, North Scituate, last week.

—Miss Anna Taylor is among recent arrivals at Kearsarge House, North Conway, N. H.

—Robert D. Farquhar of Pembroke street was among the arrivals at Waterville, N. H., last week.

—Mr. T. L. Rider has returned from a three weeks' vacation at his home in Provincetown.

—Mrs. Maria J. Frisbie, mother of Dr. Frisbie of Centre street, has returned from a ten months' visit to New Hampshire.

—The little Dawson child that was poisoned by drinking a fluid left by plumbers, has nearly recovered.

—Newtonians on the steamer from Eastport for Boston, Wednesday night, report a heavy sea and very rough passage.

—The highway department is engaged in paving the gutters on Jefferson street and the work is being done in a very thorough and substantial manner.

—Messrs. F. O. Barber and S. M. Sayford returned yesterday from Meddysbemps, Me. The other members of the party, Dr. Reid and Mr. H. S. Leonard, returned last week.

—Mr. Mason Stearns and the Misses Stearns have returned from a visit to the World's fair. After leaving Chicago they journeyed through Canada and took in various points of interest.

—Rev. Dillon Bronson returned last night from his lecture tour in New Hampshire and Vermont and will preach at the Methodist church, Sunday morning and evening.

—Mr. S. Edward Warren is now ready to make arrangements for individual or class study, in mathematics, botany and other English studies. His long experience as a teacher makes his instruction especially valuable.

—The Newton police have been for the past week in search of John Quinn, who is wanted here on several charges of larceny. This morning officers of division 3 arrested him at the West End in Boston and turned him over to Newton officers.

—The storm of Thursday did a good deal of damage about Newton, the high wind breaking limbs of shade trees, tearing down awnings, and knocking off pears and apples. But Newton was fortunate in escaping the great severity with which the storm raged in many other places. The wind also did some damage to the local telephone lines.

—The Nonantum Industrial School will hold its annual exhibition of work of pupils next Tuesday at three o'clock, in the Nonantum building, Dalby street. The new electric road from Newtonville to Watertown passes very near the building, and it is hoped many will avail themselves of this opportunity to see what has been accomplished during the summer.

—The consensus of opinion here among the old time fire ladders is that the "Nonantum" is a star tub and capable of winning a good share of the prize money offered in the various tournaments. Its performance at Worcester, where it won fourth prize, is considered very creditable, especially when it is remembered that all the crack tubs of the state entered the competition.

—The Immanuel church Sunday school will have at its session next Sunday, the last of the series of Bible talks. The address will be given by Mr. Stephen Moore upon the book of "Revelations." These talks have proved most instructive and interesting, and this last will interest all Bible scholars as the subject has always been difficult to understand. The school meets immediately after the morning service, at 11:45, and the public are cordially invited.

AUBURNDALE.

—It's a success! Thorn's soda!

—Myron White has returned from Crescent beach.

—Miss Helen M. Noyes is spending her vacation at Castine, Me.

—Mr. M. A. Noyes, Hancock street, has been critically ill for three weeks.

—Mr. P. A. Hartley and family have returned from Fall River.

—Mr. Frank Holt has returned from a vacation of two weeks.

—Congratulations to Mr. and Mrs. Geyer of Freeman street. A girl.

—Miss H. M. Childs has returned from her vacation.

—Mr. A. B. Thompson is spending his two weeks' vacation with friends in Woonsocket, R. I.

—Gordon Wetherbee, clerk at Vicker's, is enjoying a two weeks' vacation at Tetamash, N. S.

—Rev. William Durant of Saratoga Springs, N. Y., will occupy the pulpit of the Congregational church next Sunday.

—Mrs. E. M. Bunker and Miss Adriana Bunker are occupying Mr. Morgan's house on Central street.

—Capt. Raalett has gone to Moosehead Lake, and his daughter Alice to Riverton, R. I.

—The season's supply of coal for Lasell Seminary is being put in by C. F. Eddy & Co.

—Mrs. C. F. Hale and Master Robert Hale have gone to Castine, Me., for a few weeks' outing.

—Chas. W. Ring, the well known harness maker, buried his little boy Sunday.

—A change has been announced in the hours of the morning masses in St. John's church of Newton Lower Falls. For the past three years the masses were at 8 and 10 a. m., but beginning with the first Sunday of September, the masses will be at 8 and 10:30 a. m.

—Mr. Isaac Dillingham and family have returned from Cottage City, Martha's Vineyard.

—Mr. George M. Fiske and family, Wolcott street, have returned from Harpswell, Me., where they have been passing the season at Mr. James Vicker's.

—Miss Cole of Halifax, N. S. has returned to reside here, position as book-keeper for Mr. James Vicker's.

—Mrs. Wm. Harlow returned this week from Cotuit, where she has spent the summer.

—Officer Quilty is confined to the house by illness and Officer Doan is doing his night duty in his stead.

—Mr. Edward Graham Parker of Auburn place, rode last Saturday 156 miles in fifteen hours, coming from Orleans, Mass., on his New Mail Bicycle.

—Mr. and Mrs. Partridge, who have recently visited Mr. and Mrs. Augustus Bunker, returned the earliest residents of Auburndale.

—The tree in front of Mr. McKelver's carriage manufactory blew down across the street during the high wind of Thursday. The obstruction was speedily removed.

—Rev. Calvin Cutler and family are on their way home from the Columbian Exposition. Next Sunday, 27th inst., Mr. Cutler is engaged to preach in the First Presbyterian church in Saratoga Springs, N. Y.

—Mrs. E. C. Bigelow formerly of Hancock street, who has been seriously ill with nervous prostration for more than two years, is spending the season at her summer home, Red Oaks, Sandwich, N. H., and is much improved in health.

—There are letters at the postoffice for Miss Edna M. Aldrich, Mrs. Rebecca Briggs, Mr. E. L. Cotton, Mary Colton, M. K. K. Conolly, Miss Lucetta B. Gilbert, Miss Katie McKay, Miss Delia Ryan, Mrs. Hanna Stark.

—A J. Lavally, while walking on the Boston & Albany railroad track between Auburndale and Riverside, Sunday evening, was struck by the 10:30 Sunday inward bound passenger train. His right foot was crushed, the left leg fractured in two places, and he received a bad scalp wound and internal injuries. He was taken to the Newton Cottage Hospital, where he had his foot amputated. It was so badly crushed as a result of the accident. His condition Monday morning was quite comfortable.

—The accident occurred while he was walking on the tracks and caught his foot in a frog. Before he could extricate it he was struck by the locomotive, although he escaped the blow by also falling backward from the track. The wheels of the engine passed over his right foot, and his left leg was fractured.

THE WORLD'S FAIR.

AS SEEN THROUGH A PAIR OF NEWTON SPECTACLES.

The ways of reaching the Fair grounds are sufficient to accommodate many thousands per day, except that some of the cable car lines are most uncomfortably crowded about nine in the morning and again at seven in the evening.

One of the most comfortable modes of going to the grounds, if you are staying up town, is by the lake steamers. You get, in this way, a comfortable cool ride of an hour or so and have a fine view of the water front of the city.

An elevated railroad has been built from the heart of the city to a point within the grounds, so that you can ride very cheaply and quickly if you are staying anywhere near the route of the "L."

The numerous tracks of the Illinois Central R. R. and their many roughly fitted up cars show how they provided for the tens of thousands who have not yet come.

But there are many other sorts of conveyances, from the aristocratically hatched coach down to the furniture van that is for the nonce been converted into a passenger barge. Many of the new hotels and boarding places are within walking distance so that thousands make their way on foot quite leisurely after breakfast.

The entrances to the enclosure are so numerous that very rarely you have to wait long for your chance to get in. Once in, what a prospect there is before you! The immensity of the enterprise begins to dawn upon you, and you are almost bewildered as you see how much there is to do.

In fact no one can ever really "do" the Fair thoroughly. It is so large, it contains so much, it is so varied that one whole year would be consumed, were but fifteen minutes given to each of the thousands of exhibits.

Some mathematically inclined individual made the calculation that if one waited to see the Fair as it ought to be seen, he must settle down for 300 daily visits of ten hours each.

Of course no one can study it thus carefully in all its branches and details, but some will give full attention to one department and others to others, just as their tastes and fancies lead them. For the great majority it is a steady "walk around." They go and go from department to department until they are ready to drop from physical exhaustion.

People have various theories as to the very best way of seeing the Fair. Some will tell you to make the rounds of the buildings first without stopping to enter one of them, just as if you were passing through a new city. For this purpose you will find the "Intra-mural" and the "launched" helpful. The former will carry you on an elevated road nearly around the enclosure, and the latter will take you through the lagoons.

You can spend a whole day or more in rambling about the streets of this fair white city. If you have any architectural and artistic training at all you will find very much to admire in the graceful style of the buildings, both large and small, and you will command the rare skill and good judgment of those who planned and produced the general effect.

The best landscape gardeners, the best architects, the best sculptors and painters were brought together to accomplish a result that is harmonious and pleasing to a singular degree.

It is hard to see how their work could have been improved. They have reared a city which would be of itself a sufficient attraction even if not a single house had an exhibit of any kind in it.

No verbal description, no picture can give any one an adequate idea of this wonderful white city which has grown up so speedily on the shore of the lake, and which in a few months more must all be destroyed. It has to be seen to be understood, and once seen can never be forgotten.

Among the first things you notice as you watch the great crowds of people at the Fair, are the evidences of fatigue which nearly all show in their faces and in their actions.

The grounds are so extensive, the buildings so great, and there is so much to be seen that sooner or later every one betrays exhaustion.

"What did you see in that building?" asked one. The answer was, "A place to sit down." That tells the story.

It is a very tired crowd. Some come with the determination not to get used up. They are going to take it easy. They will rest for an hour or two at a time. All very well, but they forget their good resolutions and some day they confess that they also are all used up. It is doubtful if any one can spend more than ten days here without the risk of a collapse.

It is well to warn intending visitors that they must not expect

CITY GOVERNMENT.

A SPECIAL MEETING OF BOTH BRANCHES.

Another special meeting of the city council was called last Monday evening to pass upon various sewer orders for the south side. The business transacted was principally of a routine nature and none of the more important matters now under consideration were touched upon.

The aldermanic chamber was presided over by the mayor and every ward was represented.

DANGEROUS WIRES.

The mayor presented a communication from Chief H. L. Bixby of the fire department calling attention to the dangerous arrangement at present of street railway and electric wires on Watertown, Walnut, Homer and Beacon streets.

RUSSELL RESIGNS.

A communication from Willie M. Russell tendering his resignation as a member of the board of overseers of the poor, owing to business arrangements, was received. The aldermen voted to accept the resignation.

A notification of his intention to appeal from the decision of city regarding the seizing of land for sewer purposes near Watertown street was received from Robert H. Hill through his attorney, Allen Mayberry.

The petition of the Newton Street Railway Co. for permit to erect an iron pole corner of Lexington and River streets was referred.

Walter Pingree resigned his position as horseman on horse one, and it was accepted on recommendation of Chief Bixby.

PETITIONS.

Alderman Thompson presented an application for permit to build a stable 18x22 feet on Hillside avenue, Ward Five, from James W. Foster. Granted.

J. E. Sullivan et al petitioned for one street light. Referred.

W. H. Purdie, Beach street, petitioned for concrete sidewalk. Referred.

Richard Mills gave notice of intention to build a dwelling house 28x29 feet on West street. Referred.

Alderman Emerson presented a petition for main drain and sewer on Rockland street. Referred.

C. W. Sweetland, Webster Park, gave notice of intention to erect an addition 10x28 feet to be used as a dwelling house.

Elizabeth Nugent gave notice of intention to erect dwelling house corner Pearl and Watertown streets.

Thomas Moore, et al, petitioned for main drain and common sewer in Clinton place. Referred.

J. E. Rickwood petitioned for main drain and common sewer to Hancock avenue, also W. E. Webster same in Webster court. Referred.

William Frazier petitioned for license to drive large between Newton and Oak Square, Boston. Granted.

A. M. Ferris petitioned for main drain and sewer in Willard street. Referred.

ERROR OF ASSESSMENT.

A communication was presented by Alderman Emerson from Bevington street claiming an error in notice of sewer assessment received and asking the consideration of the proper authorities. Referred.

REPORTS.

Alderman Bothfield for the highway committee reported in favor of laying out Hyde street as a public way in response to the petition of J. R. Smith. Received. Favorable reports were also presented and received relative to rounding the corners of the sidewalk at Temple and Prospect, and Centre and Hyde streets.

Alderman Bothfield reported for the ordinance committee recommending the adoption of the ordinance relative to the inspection and supervision of wires. Accepted.

Alderman Hunt reporting for the sewer committee recommended granting the petitions of Ferry, et al; also the petitions for sewer in Cottage court, Kirkstall road and Trowbridge avenue. Alderman Hunt for the committee reported a special assessment applying to the estate of J. R. Leeson, Grant avenue. Alderman Bothfield reported recommending the adoption of the ordinance relating to the inspection of buildings.

ASSESSMENTS MADE.

Alderman Hunt for the committee on sewers submitted plans of the estates and amounts to be assessed abutting on Beacon, Bowe, Centre, Chase, Cypress streets, Crescent avenue, Clinton place, Chesley road, Everett, Gibbs street, Glen and Grant avenues, Homer street, Institution avenue, Irving street, Knowles street, Lake avenue, Lyman street, Maple park, Pelham and Prospect streets, Norwood avenue, Rice, Ripley, Station and Sumner streets, Trowbridge avenue, Warren and Willow streets. Received.

Alderman Bothfield presented an order appointing hearings for Monday evening, Sept. 11, at 7:30 o'clock before the aldermen and at 7:45 before the common council, on petitions for rounding the corners of Hyde and Centre, and Temple and Prospect streets, also on the laying out, grading and acceptance of Hyde street.

An order was passed authorizing the city treasurer to receive $50 from M. G. Crane to be used in repairing a street in accordance with an understanding with the highway committee.

Alderman Hunt presented an order which was passed, authorizing the city treasurer to assess, levy and collect sewer assessments on the basis of the amounts specified in schedules 11 and 12 submitted by the committee on sewers.

Hearings were also ordered for Monday evening, Sept. 11, at 7:30 o'clock before the aldermen and at 7:45 o'clock before the common council, on the taking of lands for sewer purposes on Exeter street, Kirkstall road, Trowbridge avenue and Cottage court.

Alderman Hunt presented an order for laying out sewers in Berkeley, Adams and Watertown streets. Passed.

Alderman Bothfield presented an order that the ordinance relating to the supervision of wires be passed to be enrolled. Passed.

An order was passed granting the petition of Estabrook et al, for concrete sidewalks on Sewall street.

After a recess of fifteen minutes the board reassembled.

The mayor appointed Patrick Driscoll a public weigher.

THE ORDINANCE.

Alderman Bothfield presented the ordinance relating to the inspection of buildings to be passed to be enrolled. Certain amendments were made in Sec. 20, and 80 and 82 were stricken out.

Alderman Thompson asked why the buildings of the water department and Free Library were exempt from inspection as shown by the ordinance.

Alderman Bothfield knew no reason other than that it was customary to except those in other cities. He was not prepared to say whether there was a statute governing the question or no.

Alderman Bothfield renewed his motion and after adopting the amendments as made, the ordinance was passed to be enrolled.

LICENSE REVOKED.

Alderman Roffe for the committee on licenses presented an order that the license for two pool tables granted C. A. Purdy be revoked. The order passed.

Plummer presented the petition of Robertson & Gray for an innholders license, at the Riverside Boat-house. Granted.

The N. E. Tel. & Tel. Co. petitioned for location for poles on Vista avenue, between Woodland and Aspen avenues, and a hearing was appointed for Monday evening, Sept. 11, at 8 o'clock.

IN JOINT SESSION.

At this point both branches went into joint convention to elect a successor to serve as overseer of the poor in Ward One, vice W. M. Russell, resigned.

Alderman Bothfield proposed the name of Thomas C. Parks as one eminently fitted for the position.

After balloting Thomas C. Parks was declared elected overseer of the poor, vice Russell resigned, for the balance of the present year.

RECESS.

Another recess was taken and the ordinance relating to buildings was then introduced again. It came up from the common council amended and passed to be enrolled.

The aldermen adopted the order in concurrence.

POOL ROOMS MUST CLOSE.

Alderman Bothfield said there was some complaint arising as to the conduct of some of the pool rooms in the city, and as a measure of relief he proposed that the mayor be authorized to order the pool rooms closed at 11 p. m. o'clock. He said this custom prevailed in Boston and believed it would be beneficial here.

By a unanimous vote the mayor was requested through the city marshal to notify all persons holding licenses for keeping pool and billiard rooms that their places must hereafter be closed at 11 p. m. and remain closed until 7 a. m.

Alderman Plummer presented the ordinance relating to the inspection of wires, recommending its passage to be ordained. It was passed to be ordained.

The petition of Robertson & Gray for innholders' license was granted and the aldermen then adjourned.

Common Council.

President Weed presided in the lower branch, all but three members being present.

The business was of a concurrent nature.

MORE BURGLARIES.

ROBERTSON'S RIVERSIDE BOATHOUSE ENTERED AND $100 STOLEN.

John R. Robertson's boathouse at Riverside was entered by burglars early Monday morning. The thieves confined their operations to the office, where the safe was blown open and ransacked. It contained, besides books and valuable papers, $150 in bills and silver. After securing the money, the visitors piled the papers and other documents in a heap, and made their exit from the premises, it is thought, taking a boat and effecting a landing on the Weston side of the Charles river.

A house in Weston was also entered, but nothing of value stolen.

An unoccupied house on Melrose street, was also entered and a quantity of carpenter's tools stolen, which have since been recovered. They were found Monday by Sgt. Huestis of the Newton police in the boathouse.

The safe was operated upon in the usual manner, holes being drilled through the door and the crevices filled with gunpowder, which was exploded by means of a fuse.

The Newton Lower Falls depot safe was blown open only a few days ago in precisely the same way.

The noise of the explosion attracted no attention in either case. This fact does not appear at all significant in the job at the boathouse, because of its isolation from dwellings. The Lower Falls depot is, however, surrounded by houses, and in the vicinity of a district which has good police protection. It is considered strange that the noise of the explosion there was heard by no one, so far as can be ascertained.

The latest break at Robertson's is put down to the gang that has been operating recently in Wellesley and Weston. The theory is that the men use a boat for their journeys to the towns and cities along the line of the Charles river, and the police believe they belong in the vicinity of Natick.

State Detective Bean of Natick is at work on the case, and visited the scene on the Riverside break Monday morning. A special effort will be made to close in on the gang, and it is believed that the police now have some evidence which will establish the identity of some of its members.

Watertown Police.

The citizens of Watertown are loud in their complaints of insufficient police protection during the day time. A short time since, on the plea of economy, Officer Cooney, who had been on duty, was transferred to night duty, as was Officer Lyons, who patrolled the east end of the town. At the same time two special officers who had been employed for about a year regularly were laid off. Recently the residents of the East end have made such a protest that Officer Lyons has again been returned to his old position and Officer Callahan reinstated as night officer.

The people of the centre of the town, however, are kicking vigorously. At present Chief Parker is the only day officer in that locality, and when he is away on official business, at court or at dinner, there is absolutely no officer in the business section of the town.

Friday a petition for additional police protection was circulated, and judging from the large number of signatures obtained it will be the strongest presented to the selectmen this year.

A GREAT RAILROAD.

THE FAMOUS AROOSTOOK COUNTY OF MAINE TO BE DEVELOPED.

Into the famous Aroostook county of Maine, from Brownville, in Piscataquis county, a railroad which, in more than one respect, is the most peculiar ever built, is now being steadily pushed toward completion.

It is the longest railroad ever projected under one management in New England. The potato may be said to be the leading factor which led up to its construction, though the spruce and hemlock log aided somewhat. One-third of it is through a wilderness known only to the hunter, trapper and woodsman. In its construction it is wholly modern. It is destined to open up fertile lands which can be made to support millions of people. It is a hot competitor of, and has a hot enemy in, the greatest railroad in the world, the Canadian Pacific; it has found foes at home and in Wall street in New York and State street in Boston, and has found friends there, too; the great American Express fights for it, and invests almost $250,000 in it, while the great Dominion Express of Canada is its deadly enemy; it holds as a secret from whence comes $3,000,000 of the $4,000,000 to be used in its construction.

In its building are found experts from Canada, New Brunswick, Illinois, Iowa, Colorado and Central America, and for more than a year these men have been letting in the sunlight upon trackless forests and great water powers, and have driven the moose, caribou, deer and bear from their long-time stamping ground.

Save those having an immediate interest in it, this road is unknown to the world. A Herald man has recently traversed it, looked it over, interviewed its engineers, studied the country and collected general information regarding it.

It is known as the Bangor & Aroostook railroad. It will have for its main line a rail from Brownville to Van Buren, through Houlton, Presque Isle and Caribou, a distance of 177.2 miles, with a branch to Fort Fairfield of 12.9 miles and one to Ashland of 42.3 miles, a total of 232.4 miles. This is about the distance between Boston and New York, and is a greater mileage than the combined mileage of the original Boston & Maine and Eastern roads between Boston and Portland. Brownville is about equal distance between the east and west boundary lines of the state, and the fact that, commenced here, 232 miles of road can be built in one direction, shows better than anything else the size of the state. It is intended that over this road shall come the product of Aroostook county. This county, which has never had a foot of railroad save that owned and operated by Canadian, is itself nearly as large as the state of Massachusetts, and is undoubtedly the most fertile and prosperous county east of the Mississippi river.

To Boston and the industrial world of New England, as well as to sportsmen, the new Bangor & Aroostook railroad means much more than appears upon the surface. In the first place, it checks a big foreign corporation, which, gaining a foothold on Maine soil, undertook to dictate and create and hold a gigantic monopoly. It opens a way for the setting of more than 400 square miles of the finest farming lands in this country. It opens up vast powers, along whose sources is the material for the making of millions of tons of paper pulp. Along the line all kinds of hard growth are seen, and of wondrous size. It can reduce the freight to Boston one-third on all produce, and, therefore, it will be felt in every market and provision store in Massachusetts.

It penetrates a grand hunting land, and in the future, where now all is solitude thousands can come to fish and hunt, and, a big thing in the aroma of the spruce and pine, gain health and strength. The line will be open in November to Houlton, and places, hay and grain from that section to Boston will be largely moved by the new line. [From "A Great Railroad," in Boston Sunday Herald, Aug. 27, 1893.]

BOOKS AND MAGAZINES.

The September Harper's Magazine, which will be published next Tuesday (August 23), will contain a brilliant account of "A General Election in England," by Richard Harding Davis, illustrated by W. H. Russell; "Albert Durer," by Elizabeth Roberts; "Pauillac," by ex-Senator Samuel Bell Maxey; "The Letters of James Russell Lowell," by Charles Eliot Norton; "Down Love Lane," in Old New York, by Thomas A. Janvier; "The Diplomacy and Law of the Island Canals," by Sidney Weisinger; and "Edward Emerson, Harvard," by the director of Lick Observatory, by S. W. Barnham. The fiction of the Number is agreeably varied. William Black's "The Handsome Humes" reaches its climax, and Miss Woolson's "Horace Chase" approaches an end, which will be reached in the October Magazine. There are two short stories, "Gabriel," and "The Lost Millions of Perote," by Maurice Kingsley; and "The General's Sword," by Robert C. V. Meyers; while "A Gentleman of the Royal Guard," by William McLennan, tells a tale as romantic as any in fiction—that of the life of Daniel de Grosbois, Sieur de La Roche, the hero of Dr. A. Conan Doyle's novel, "The Refugees."

Mr. Henry Irving, who landed at Quebec the other day to begin a protracted American theatrical tour, will furnish to the September Forum a charming article on "My Four Favorite Parts." The four favorite parts are Hamlet, Iago, Richard III. and Lear, concerning each of which the great tragedian will offer some particularly engaging and illuminating criticism. Many playgoers will wonder that Mr. Irving should not have included the part of Mathias in "The Bells"—one of his great successes.

I have been a great sufferer from catarrh for over ten years; had it very bad, could hardly breathe. Some nights I could not sleep and had to walk the floor. I purchased Ely's Cream Balm and am using it freely. It is working a cure surely. I have advised several friends to use it, and with happy results in every case. It is the medicine above all others for catarrh, and it is worth its weight in gold. I thank God I have found a remedy I can use with safety and that does all that is claimed for it. It is curing my deafness.—B. W. Sperry, Hartford, Conn.

TABACCO HABIT CURED EASILY

A FEW Testimonials from persons who have been cured by the use of Hill's Tablets.

THE OHIO CHEMICAL CO.:—DEAR SIR:—I have been using your cure for tobacco habit, and found it would do what you claim for it. I used ten cents worth of the strongest chewing tobacco a day, and from one to five cigars; or I would smoke from ten to forty pipes of tobacco. Have smoked and smoked for twenty-five years, and two packages of your Tablets cured me so I have no desire for it. B. M. JAYLEIGH, Leslie, Mich.

DOUGLAS FERRY, N. Y.

THE OHIO CHEMICAL CO.:—GENTLEMEN:—Some time ago I sent for $1.00 worth of your Tablets for Tobacco Habit. I received them all right, and although I was both a heavy smoker and chewer, they did the work in less than three days. I am cured. Truly yours, MATTHEW JOHNSON, P. O. Box 45.

PITTSBURGH, PA.

THE OHIO CHEMICAL CO.:—GENTLEMEN:—It gives me pleasure to speak a word of praise for your Tablets. My son was strongly addicted to the use of liquor, and through a friend, I was led to try your Tablets. He was a heavy and constant drinker, but after using your Tablets but three days he quit drinking, and will not touch liquor of any kind. I have waited four months before writing you, in order to know the cure was permanent. Yours truly, MRS. HELEN MORRISON, CINCINNATI, OHIO.

THE OHIO CHEMICAL CO.:—GENTLEMEN:—Your Tablets have performed a miracle in my case. I have used morphine, hypodermically, for seven years, and have been cured by the use of W. L. LUTGAY. Address all Orders to THE OHIO CHEMICAL CO., 51, 53 and 55 Opera Block, LIMA, OHIO.

ADIEU!

You have a heart of fire and gold—
Nor gold nor fire for me is bright;
I would not forego those days of old,
Which seemed to show your heart aright.

Not mine to mix among the crowd
Who worship you and bend the knee—
To sing your praises long and loud;
Love's silence is reserved for me.

My love, that is both dumb and deep,
Is freely given, as 'tis true;
What secret still the fates may keep
I know not, but I say adieu!

I say adieu because my part
Must be to leave that whirling train,
Where every moment is a smart,
And every day a year of pain.

IN THE CAB.

"He allers was queer, Del was."

The observation was given without solicitation. Jerome Bonner was not the man to wait for an invitation to express his opinion. His long habit of sitting on the box with his hand on the throttle ready to "pull her open" did not influence him in conversation. Only in the cab, with the schedule before him, was he amenable to signal. There he was trusted. The superintendent considered him the safest engineer on the road.

When he took a train out, the dispatcher breathed easily, for there were some daredevil engineers in the employ of that company. They would rattle a train around curves and shoot down grades with the greatest disregard for the passengers' comfort and fears. There were men who delighted in the shrieks of the whistle. How they would laugh when echo was frightened and screamed back the strident voice of the engine. There were many such men in the pay of the Kane and Carney railroad, but Jerome Bonner was not one of them, nor was Deleahanty. He was a fireman and had been on the road two years when the wreck occurred on Kane hill. It was the memory of the wreck that led Jerome Bonner to remark to a passenger about Deleahanty's eccentricities.

A little group had surrounded Jerome at the water tank and signal station on Kane hill, where a danger flag had pulled up the train. The conductor was up stairs waiting for orders. There was a wreck above—some coal cars on the track—and there was a prospect of a long delay. Jerome had got out of the cab and was sitting in the sun on one of the ground timbers of the tank trestle. The fireman had made himself comfortable on his box and with feet sticking out of the window was taking a snooze. The engine snorted occasionally as if impatient. Most of the passengers were wandering about aimlessly, some chatting, others looking in the bush for berries of the wintergreen, and all were beginning to fret. Even those around Jerome were hoping he would take matters in his own hands and run the train over the hill. He, however, attracted their attention when to one of them he spoke the words of the opening sentence.

"Tell us about him, won't you, please?" asked a mite of a woman, an excursionist.

"Oh, do if it is a story. I am so tired of this stupid wait," said her companion, not an overlarge woman herself and apparently blase.

"Fraid Deleahanty won't interest you ladies much. He was a commonplace man, but poplar—mighty poplar with the boys, 'spite of his queerness."

"Then do tell us about him."

"Waal, he and me courted the same gurl, Susan Briggs, a black eyed gurl as ever you see and purty, no mistake. And mebbe that's why I thought Del queer actin, and mebbe he'd the same 'pinion uv me. Since then I have allers noticed that men in luv with the same gurl see each other 'bout as a delirium tremens subject sees snakes. Costy, try them garses."

"Two and a half," called Costy, and fixed himself on the box again, while, satisfied with the report, Jerome resumed his story.

"I was on the road, and Del wanted work, but there was no job for him. He wanted to fire. One day Jim Morgan got sick, and when I went to the roundhouse the next mornin there war Deleahanty in bran new overalls rubbin the brass on No. 12. No. 12 was my engine. I nodded to him and then hunted up the foreman of the roundhouse. 'Del's gone out with you this trip. Jim Morgan's too sick!' There was no help for it, so I went back, jumped into the cab and run her out into the yard. Del looked up from the handrail on the boiler with a kind uv hurt look on his face.

"The fireman usually bring out the engine. Lettin him do it was a way of sayin he could be trusted to run an engine. Del kept on rubbin the rod and makin it shine as I backed down and coupled. I mind lookin at him. He was between me and the track, and I had to look over the side window. He was big, and I knowed they were not right between us, and I said nothin. He seemed hankerin for a fight. Minute we coupled Del came in through his window, throwed the waste in the box and jerked open the door of the firebox. Jist then the gong rung, and I give 12 the steam. Delshoved in some coal, and as we got under headway he came to my side of the cab and stood between it and the tender.

"I knowed what he come fur, and it made me mad. Susan Briggs lived jist at the edge uv the town and was allers but fur my train, and Del knowed it. So he war goin to let her see him on the same cab with me, and in overalls. I war so durn mad I jist looked straight ahead, while he 'ted and laughed at Susan, and she 'ted and laughed at him. He looked 'k till we got round the curve and then 'vent grinnin at his box. Tarnation! I war so mad I could scarcely see the track, and I run like fury.

"Del and me didn't talk much on that trip. When 12 war in the roundhouse agin, I went right off, but Del hung 'round, polishin and fixin up. I felt I war in for it and made up my mind Susan would have to settle with she would have mighty quick. If she took Del, all right. But she had to come to the point. Bat, Lord! and here Jerome glanced at the lady passengers, 'I could allers run an engine, but manage a woman war more than I could do.

"The long and short uv it was that Del and me run on 12 for about two year, and Susan would not make up her mind. Del and me war good friends, so far as the world knowed, but we war far apart in our hearts.

"We never had a wheel off before the night when Del pulled 12 through on Kane hill.

"We had stepped at the tank fur water. Del war at the spout, and I war leanin out, looking back for his signal. Susan had been sort of preferrin me uv late, and I war feelin good. Del war sulky and stood with his head down, waitin fur the tank to fill.

"Men will think the truth if they don't speak it, and lookin at Del I says to myself, 'He's a finer lookin feller than you, Jerome Bonner, and Susan Briggs knows it.' I shut off the safety valve. The steam had 'een blowin off and makin a good deal of noise. The moonlight made it very ghostly, and once in awhile I looked up at it. When it were shut off, there rose a rumble out uv the stillness that reached Del quick as it did me. We both looked up the hill, and there, roundin the curve, war a shadder. We knowed at once it war a runaway train comin down on us. Waal, runaway trains with nobody on them had happened before, and we knowed what to do.

"Cut her loose, Del," I yelled.

"He dropped on the platform and called: 'Back a little.'

"I reversed 12 and eased the link. 'Go ahead,' he yelled.

"And as I opened the throttle I heard the link drop against the drawbar. We war free: 12 war loose, a-goin to meet the train smashin down on her. I patted the iron gurl, fur I wuz fond uv her, and she went up the hill as a bird, and I, forgettin all about Del, stooped over to lock the door uv the firebox.

"A great big hand grabbed me by the throat, and looking up over my shoulder I saw Del. His face was as black as midnight when there's no moon, and in his right hand he had a couplin pin.

"Yer have got to jump, Jerome Bonner," he said.

"Let go uv me, I managed to say, while I hung on to the reverse lever.

"I won't. Yer have got to jump and I'll pull 12 through."

"He loosed his grip on my throat. 'Do you want to make me talked uv as a coward?' I asked.

"We both of us could hear the train gettin closer.

"Jerome, if you jump you'll save from bein a murderer. If you don't, out of my reach, I'll kill you and take my chances uv gettin through all right. Then I'll marry Susan Briggs. Quick—make up your mind. Promise me you'll jump, or I'll kill yer, and I don't want ter be yer murderer—and if I die in the bump you will be alive to marry Susan. She likes you best and me next. Jump!"

"He pulled me off the box and shoved me across the cab. The train was leapin on us. One more second, and all would be over mebbe. Del was still behind me holdin the pin up ready to strike, and I knew he would. He war strong, and I had to go. Out I went, and I landed safe. No. 12 met the train plucky and stopped it dead. The cars piled all over her and buried the cab. Jist before she struck Del throwed the safety valve open and shut her off. Then he stood still.

"He war knocked part through the window when the bump came, and I found him there. I felt like a sneakin coward. Del had pretended he would kill me jist to get me off the engine, and there he war dead and me livin. My month war shut to the world, but I went home to Susan and told her how Del had died for her. 'He believed you liked me best, Susan, and if I got killed you would feel awful bad, so he jist drove me off 12 with a couplin pin, and then stood by her.'

"The tears came into Susan's eyes, and she wiped them on her apron. I war holdin her hand, and she took it away. I liked her fur weepin and lettin go uv me. If she hadn't, I'd a-turned agin fur. Feelin that she'd like to be alone, I went away.

"I met her at Del's funeral. She war quiet and sad, and I only nodded to her. The people all wondered 'bout my jumpin and thought me a coward, but nobody dared say so. Susan knowed I warnt, and I didn't care what the other people thought.

"I didn't say nothin to Susan about gettin married fur about six months after Deleahanty war buried, and when I spoke uv it at last she made up her mind.

"Jerome," she said, 'I allers believed I liked you better'n Del, but ever since he died I've felt like his widdor, and I know you ain't courtin me that way.'

"And I warnt. So I left her, and I ain't made up my mind yet to court her as Deleahanty's widdor, but I am wishin all the time that Del war livin and I war dead. Then mebbe Susan would be my widdor.

"Ladies," said Jerome as he arose from the beam, "would you like to ride on the engine? I am goin to run up the hill to pump water into the boiler, and I'll show you where Deleahanty died."

The lady travelers accepted the invitation. Jerome gallantly helped them in the cab and started the engine up the hill.—Alfred L. King in New York Dispatch.

Founding a Western Magazine.

We know some very ambitious and very worthy gentlemen who would like to be put into communication with those capitalists who have the money for a magazine enterprise. These gentlemen possess everything necessary to success except that essential vulgarly called "the stuff." And it is "the stuff" that is mighty hard to be got at just now.

Our opinion is that the way to the founding of a great magazine in the west must be made clear by and with a weekly publication that shall faithfully represent the west and honestly reflect western sentiment; that shall wage a merciless war upon the intellectual hermaphrodites and dawdling perverts and petticoated clay eaters who, on little tinsel thrones along the eastern coast, presume to set themselves up as dictators in the great realm of American literature.

We are not for any skirmish with those humbugs. We are for a war of extermination. That war is bound to come sooner or later. It must not be begun, however, on the part of the west until the west is fully prepared to sail into and disembowel every last mother's son of those twiddling twaddling squirts and their queer little parasites.—Eugene Field in Chicago News-Record.

Curious News—Beats.

One of the biggest newspaper "beats" in 30 years was achieved by La Nacion, a little newspaper published in the Argentine Republic. This newspaper published the news of the accident to the Victoria a day ahead of every other paper in the world, and the news of the disaster was known in Buenos Ayres before it was in London. The dispatch to the British government announcing the disaster lay 12 hours unopened in the admiralty office. Meanwhile the news had been stolen off the wires and sent by a friend of the Argentine paper to La Nacion, which was able to publish it in advance of all its contemporaries. Such at any rate is the story of the "beat" as it is related here in newspaper form. It is safe to say that any of the leading American newspapers would have given thousands of dollars to have obtained exclusive intelligence of the Victoria disaster, enabling it to beat the world with the news. La Nacion's "beat" seems to have been a case not of enterprise, but of good luck.—New York Letter.

Chinese Pirates Successful.

The Shanghai papers contain a report obtained from native advices from Canton of a serious conflict between some piratical craft and gunboats at a place midway between Shaohchow and Canton. It appears that while three gunboats belonging to the customs were escorting two boats laden with sycee value at 40,000 taels, belonging to the Hoihow Likin customs, on their way to Canton, they were attacked by a numerous fleet of pirates numbering, it is reported, over 600 men, and after a desperate fight, during which the government men lost nearly 60 in killed and wounded, the pirates, being in shallow bottomed boats, maneuvered effectively around the gunboats, which, being completely raked fore and aft, were compelled at last to strike their colors, and there was a general cry of 'save qui pent, leaving the pirates on the field.

Curious Contrasts.

The ill temper, the lack of self restraint, the utter unreasonableness which at the present time in various parts of the world characterize the relations of men with their fellows are psychological phenomena eminently deserving the attention of the philosopher. In Central America, in Colorado, in the Fifth Avenue hotel, in Paris, in remote Siam, even within the staid and sacred precincts of the British house of commons, lunacy and individual irresponsibility seem temporarily to prevail.

Professional pugilism alone preserves prudent passivity. While Mitchell, Corbett, John L. and their brothers of the ring keep their heads cool and judiciously refrain from fight, statesmen, legislators, politicians and other representatives of the so called higher civilization are flying at one another's throats and making day and night hideous with their howlings. Why is this thus?—William B. Clark in New York Sun.

Cost of the Borden Case.

The cost to the county of the trial of Lizzie Borden in Fall River, Mass., is now estimated at $14,000. What Miss Borden's counsel's fees were may only be inferred, but the pecuniary rewards of successful practitioners in New England are as a rule—outside of Boston at least—not more than one-third of what they are in the big cities. For defending Lizzie Borden in a New York court and securing her acquittal her leading counsel would not have asked less than $25,000. The items of the bill of costs to the county include $500 to Assistant District Attorney William H. Moody, $1,400 to Professor Wood of Harvard, $2,574 to other medical experts, $1,587 to stenographers, $1,375 to jury fees and $1,760 to deputy sheriffs.

Seeing the Fair In One Day.

Four young women from Sangamon county made their first visit to Jackson park last Wednesday. They walked through the Fisheries, Government, Manufactures, Electricity, Mining, Agricultural and Transportation buildings, and the Illinois, California and Washington state buildings, and left for home the same night. They said they didn't think it was much of a show.—Chicago Tribune.

LASELL AT THE WORLD'S FAIR.

SOME OF THE GRADUATES WHO HAVE VISITED AND ADMIRER IT.

There is one pretty little nook in the woman's building at the World's Fair that attracts more attention than all the rest. It is located in the section devoted to the headquarters of organizations in the south end of the building. It is not large nor is it pretentious, but it is so dainty, so cozy, and so artistic that one cannot pass it without stopping, says the Sunday Globe, to express the admiration it arouses.

Three colors are blended in its make up—blue, white and gold—and so prettily are they harmonized that they appear as if taken from a soft summer sky. Of these three colors have some significance. They are the colors of the Lasell seminary of Auburndale, Mass., and the booth in which they are used with so much artistic effect, is the headquarters of the school.

It is a rendezvous for the girls of the seminary and their friends, and a more popular place is not to be found in the woman's building. The booth occupies a space of about 100 square feet and is triangular in shape. The walls are of wood, constructed something after the style of a seashore cottage, with miniature gables and picturesque little windows draped with silken curtains of the softest blue.

The exterior is all in pale blue, with the name of the school lettered in gold. The interior walls are of carved wood, background being light blue to harmonize with the other framework, while the carving appears like raised figures decorated with gold.

Along the side walls are other carved figures symbolizing the departments of the seminary.

The walls are still further decorated with pictures of the school, groups of the students and scenes about the campus. The floor is handsomely carpeted with axminster, and easy chairs beautifully upholstered are as plentiful as the size of the room will permit. On a table in the centre are copies of the Lasell Leaves, the school paper, the latest "Al-lertel," and a complete register of the seminary since its foundation, bound in the same colors that predominate, blue, gold and white.

Among the practical exhibits intended to show that the young ladies learn something besides art, music, and literature are a couple of loaves of bread, made and baked by one of the students. A fresh supply of this homemade bread is kept on hand at all times, some one of the young ladies of the school, sending two loaves every week.

Then there is a dress, too, cut, fit and made by the members of the industrial department. Owing to the limited space allowed the school in which to make its display a large number of exhibits had to be returned. Still, the showing made is highly creditable, and the young ladies have received abundance of praise for their work.

Some one connected with the school is in attendance at the headquarters at all times to welcome members of the alumnae, students, friends and visitors as well. Mrs. W. T. Shepherd was first in charge, then Miss Martha Ransom, Miss Mabel Fahey and Miss Emily Gann in Miss Berna Morrison of Chicago will be turn in charge during the coming month.

The interest felt in the seminary's exhibit may be inferred from the following list of post and former members who have written their names on the register: Boston—S. M. Whipple 88, S. M. FREDERICK LOVEJOY.

Of the city of Lowell, known throughout Massachusetts as owner of the Lovejoy Boston and Lowell Express Line, City Marshall, or Chief of Police, for several years in the city of Lowell, Mass., writes:

"I am personally acquainted with S. W. Johnson of Belfast, Me., the President of the Rodolf Medicine Co. While in the city of Belfast I was greatly benefited by his remedies, prescribed for me. I also know by reputation Dr. A. E. Kilgore of the Rodolf Medical staff, and I have great confidence in Rodolf's New Discovery, on account of the high professional standing of these eminent physicians, who are the compounders of the remedy, and have thoroughly tested its merits in their practice."

Rodolf's New Medical Discovery and Rodolf's Cream Emulsion are for sale by Geo. Ingraham, West Newton; John F. Paine, Newtonville.

A BUILDING ORDINANCE.

The new building ordinance which is in course of being adopted by the city government has some interesting features. In the first place it provides for an Inspector of Buildings, an official who has been much needed in this city, and who will find plenty of important work before him. His duties will be, first, to look after the city buildings, and see that they are kept in proper repair.

He is also to inspect all buildings in course of erection, alteration or repair, and see that the city ordinances are complied with; look after public halls, churches, etc., and see that they are properly supplied with means of egress, and that they are safe for public use, so that lives may not be endangered in case of a sudden alarm of fire, or other accident.

The ordinance also provides that notice shall be given in writing by any owner or other person who intends to erect or alter a building, and a permit must be secured from the inspector before work is commenced.

The size of the foundation walls of all buildings is given, and if the regulations are enforced we shall not see such flimsy foundation walls as have been put up in recent years, walls that would not stand against a stiff wind, if left unsupported. The width of the walls of brick buildings is also defined, and brick partition walls are also provided for, a very necessary thing, as some recent fires have proved. The ordinance also provides for clear spaces between wooden buildings, the proper size of piers and columns, the grade of cellars, boundary of brick walls, timbering of floors, the construction of chimneys and flues, fire guards, snow guards, plumbing and house drainage, and other matters, and the ordinance itself has been modelled upon those of other cities which have been found to stand a practical test.

The ordinance is one that has long been needed in Newton and parts of the city are becoming so thickly populated that the safety of the public demands stringent rules and regulations, which can be enforced by some one whose special business it is to look after such things. If the right man is secured as inspector, there will be but little trouble in enforcing the provisions of the ordinance, but he will need to have a good supply of courage and self reliance. The ordinance will be of special interest to contractors and builders, and it has been submitted to and approved by the most reliable builders of Newton, who have a practical knowledge of what is required.

HON. JOHN E. RUSSELL has surprised the public by announcing that if nominated for Governor by the Democratic Convention he will accept, and this probably settles the question of the Democratic candidate. Mr. Russell has always hitherto refused to even consider the question, although he has always been ready to help in a campaign, and is probably one of the most popular stump speakers in the state. In the interview in which he consented to the use of his name, Mr. Russell was as witty in speaking as on the stump. He said of the alleged desire to have him run:

"It has almost seemed to me that I was taken back upon to fill a gap. To think of asking a man 60 years old to step to the front when there are young men whom one would think willing to jump at the opportunity. I am much better at talking for others than for myself, which I am afraid would not be realized for it is known that I have talked over 50 nights at a single campaign and almost always alone at that. I am afraid if I were nominated, the boys would think of the way I stumbled in previous years and would depend upon me to do everything, still, I sometimes think stumping amounts to very little, that it is like the wind whistling through a beehive. I suppose we are forced to our stumping because the other fellows do so much. I am in favor of a stout campaign this year."

The general impression is, however, that this is not going to be a good year for the party in power. It is always blamed by the mass of voters for all the misfortunes that happen, whether the misfortunes are short crops, or financial panics, and unless business improves very decidedly, the Democrats will not win many victories.

THE response which the city treasurer of Newton and other city treasurers have met with in their efforts to give six per cent for short time loans, shows that there is plenty of money lying idle, and only waiting a favorable chance to be invested. The trouble is that there is a general and unreasonable scare, and people who have money are hoarding it, instead of paying their debts and making their usual purchases. They seem to think that if they let go of what money they have they will never get any more, and when a large number feel this way, there must be hard times. The repeal of the Sherman bill may give these timid souls confidence, and if so, we shall have prosperous times again. No one so far is able to give any good and sufficient reason for the present depression, other than the one above stated.

THE action of the judge of the district court of Abington in sentencing three officials of the Old Colony road to one month in the house of correction shows that there is one court where the railroads are not allowed to have everything their own way. It was proved that the officials incited their workmen to the riot, and although the sentence was not as severe as the law allows, it will still convey a valuable lesson, and may inspire the new owners of the Old Colony road with a wholesome respect for Massachusetts' law, which is very different from the state of things in Connecticut, where the Consolidated road owns everything. It is to be hoped that the sentence will be carried out.

A WRITER in the Boston Herald asks what Gen. Draper has done so far to justify his election over Geo. Fred. Williams, who was such a powerful champion for honest money in the last house. The Boston Record replies that no one has done anything yet but talk, but wait till Gen. Draper begins to entertain and see what influence he will have socially. The Record might also claim that Gen. Draper will be very strong in committee work, that is always a safe claim to make, when a member shines nowhere else, and best of all, it can never be disputed. However, Gen. Draper is not a public speaker, and will not be heard from in that way, but he can probably be depended on to vote for the repeal of the Sherman bill.

THE police have received orders to strictly enforce the ordinance that bicyclers shall have their lamps lighted at night, which is a move in the right direction. On our dark streets, and they are dark most nights, now that the moon schedule is on, the silent wheels are a terror to every one who has occasion to cross a street, and accidents are often very narrowly escaped. The rule is as much for the protection of the wheelmen as for the public, so that they ought to be glad to obey it.

THE Milford Journal must be thinking of some other man in the following paragraph:

We read that Mr. Farquhar of Newton gave a dinner to Mr. Greenhalge the other day, and that in the evening a large number of neighbors and friends gathered informally to meet the distinguished guest. It looks as if this was Mr. F.'s year for supporting Republican nominees.

If Mr. Farquhar is not a loyal Republican, then it would be hard to find a man who is.

CONGRESSMAN WALKER made an excellent speech on Thursday, in favor of the unconditional repeal of the Sherman bill, and proved that Massachusetts is on the right side on this question, without regard to party lines. He gave an admirable answer to Mr. Cannon of Illinois, whose demagogical harangue needed a sharp rejoinder.

WABAN.

—Miss Minnie Locke is the guest of Mr. Nutter in Somersworth, N. H.

—Mrs. Woolbury and son are spending a few weeks at Cape Cod.

—Mr. J. W. Heaton is in New York. Mrs. Heaton is visiting friends at Orange, Mass.

—Miss Ellsworth, who has been at Mrs. F. H. Henshaw's since her return home, has left for Minneapolis.

—The Misses Collins have returned from Concord, N. H., where they have been visiting their sister, Mrs. John Kent.

—Mr. L. K. Harow's cat boat "Defiance," Capt. H. E. Perry, won second prize in the 201st race of the Beverly Yacht Club last Saturday. The boat has taken a number of first, second and third prizes in previous races, and is considered one of the fastest in Buzzard's Bay.

—Mr. and Mrs. E. R. Rand are entertaining Mrs. Eldridge and son of Washington, D. C.

Miss Margie Seaver is at Centerville for the remainder of the summer. Rob. Seaver has been sojourning in New Hampshire during the past week.

—Mr. Cloutman is away on a business trip through the South. Before returning home he will go westward and visit the World's fair.

—The city authorities have caused to be torn down a small building on the land adjoining the almshouse which in past years was used as a hospital for contagious diseases. Of late years it has been inhabited by tramps whom it is thought caused the fire which occurred there in the early spring.

—Thomas Flynn met with quite an accident last week while working on the grounds of Mr. F. H. Henshaw. The pick with which he was working separated into two parts, the lower part striking Mr. Flynn in the face and rendering him unconscious. He also received bruises and cuts about the face and nose. He is now much better.

"CAVENDISH" AT NEWTON.

HENRY JONES, THE WHIST EXPERT, ENTERTAINED AT THE NEWTON CLUB HOUSE.

Mr. Henry Jones ("Cavendish"), the great whist master, was entertained at the Newton clubhouse, Newtonville, Tuesday evening.

He was a special guest of Mr. Fisher Ames, the author of "American Leads on Whist," and dined at Mr. Ames' residence in West Newton prior to his visit to the clubhouse.

A large company of gentlemen met the distinguished player, and he was given a most cordial reception. After being shown about the clubhouse, Mr. Jones enjoyed a game of whist with alternate partners. The play for an hour or so was watched with great interest, and the less experienced players got some valuable pointers.

Mr. Jones is a man of most agreeable manners, and not only enjoys the game of whist, but takes kindly to those diversions of the Newton clubhouse which furnish amusement for clubmen. He is an excellent billiard player, and in a game that night with his host, Mr. Ames, demonstrated his knowledge of its scientific points. He is also a good tennis player, and takes a lively interest in all healthful forms of athletic sports.

The program at the Newton clubhouse was entirely informal, its social character forming the distinctive and very agreeable feature. Mr. Jones arrived in New York from England on May 15. His main object in coming to this country was to attend, as an honorary member, the third annual congress of the American Whist League, and at the same time to avail himself of the opportunity of visiting the World's fair. Since his arrival he has visited New York, Brooklyn, Philadelphia, Washington and Mt. Vernon. At the capital he was joined by friends, who accompanied him through the Shenandoah valley to Chicago. From Chicago he journeyed to Milwaukee, later returning to the former city, and from there coming east. Wednesday he was the guest of the Somerset Club in Boston.

Mr. Jones has a high opinion of American whist players, it being his judgment that America possesses more whist players of ability than any other country in the world.

The visit of "Cavendish" to America is regarded by experts here as of the greatest value to the interests of the game. It has enabled students to measure themselves by the standard of the greatest living expert, and has afforded them the opportunity of his friendly criticism and advice.

Miss Spear's school will reopen Sept. 11th, in Bacon's block. Applications should be made at once, as the number of pupils will be limited. See adv.

Nothing can be substituted for the Royal Baking Powder and give as good results.

No other leavening agent will make such light, sweet, delicious, wholesome food.

If some grocers urge another baking powder upon you, it is because of the greater profit upon it. This of itself is evidence of the superiority of the "Royal." To give greater profit the other must be a lower cost powder, and to cost less it must be made with cheaper and inferior materials, and thus, though selling for the same, give less value to the consumer.

To insure the finest cake, the most wholesome food, be sure that no substitute for Royal Baking Powder is accepted by you.

—The action of aldermen in closing C. A. Purdy's pool room by revoking his license has furnished a topic for more or less discussion. Mr. Purdy wants a hearing. It is said, but the case was one in which the investigation was conducted by the police committee, and that body found what was deemed sufficient cause for the step. It appears that some persons who patronized Mr. Purdy's place took some liberties which created more or less talk and the proprietor came in for a share of the censure on the part of citizens some of whom made complaints to the authorities. A license for running pool or billiard tables concedes no other rights and the party to whom the license is granted is alone held accountable for the conduct of the place opened publicly to the patrons of these games. There is a good deal of opposition

CITY OF NEWTON.

Ordinance Relating to the Inspection and Supervision of Electric Wires.

Be it ordained by the city council of the City of Newton, as follows:

SECTION 1. The chief of the fire department is hereby designated as the officer required by the provisions of section three of chapter four hundred and one of the laws of the Commonwealth of Massachusetts, of the year eighteen hundred and ninety entitled "An act relating to the regulation and supervision of wires by electric streets or buildings in cities," and he shall have and exercise the powers and duties named in that chapter and supplementary thereto and in this ordinance. He shall be called the "inspector of wires." The assistant chief of the fire department shall be deputy inspector of wires under the direction of the chief, in case of the absence or inability to act or vacancy in the office of the inspector of wires, he shall perform the duties of the inspector.

SECTION 2. The said inspector shall supervise every wire over streets or buildings in the city, and every wire within a building which is designed to carry an electric light or power current, or any electric current, and in general all wires over streets or buildings in the city; he shall notify the person or corporation owning or operating any such wire whenever its attachment, insulation, supports or appliances are unsuitable or unsafe, or the tags or marks thereon are insufficient or illegible, he shall remove any wire abandoned for use or not provided with a tag or mark by the owner according to law, such expense of removal to be paid by the owner of such wire; he shall see that all wires are properly attached and insulated to such wires are strictly enforced; he shall perform such other duties as are or may hereafter be required of him by the city council or order or ordinance of the city council; he may, subject to appropriations of the city council, employ such assistants as may be necessary for the performance of the duties of his office.

SECTION 3. The inspector of wires shall, by virtue of his office, be the superintendent of the fire alarm telegraph, the police signal system and all other electric wires and wire systems now or hereafter owned by the city. He shall have the care and management of the wires, apparatus and machinery, and other property connected therewith; shall keep the same at all times in good repair, and shall see that all wires are properly attached and insulated to such wires are strictly enforced; he shall see that all wires are properly attached and insulated to such wires are strictly enforced; he shall see that all wires are properly attached and insulated to such wires are strictly enforced.

SECTION 4. The inspector of wires shall, by virtue of his office, be the superintendent of the fire alarm telegraph, the police signal system and all other electric wires and wire systems now or hereafter owned by the city. He shall have the care and management of the wires, apparatus and machinery, and other property connected therewith; shall

VIOLETS IN THE GRASS.

The blue wild violets in the grass,
They smile up at me as I pass.
The tender hue of April skies,
They remind me of my baby's eyes.
My Bonnie little laughing face
Amid the violets in the grass!

The bonniest babe was ever born!
Her tresses like the tasseled corn,
Her mouth the sweetest half-blown rose,
For laugh the merriest breeze that blows!
Her eyes, what could their blue surpass?
Not even the violets in the grass.

Ah! how plain I see her stand,
Her feet sunk in them, and her hand
Eager to pluck them all for me,
Her face aglow with baby glee,
Her fingers hidden in the mass
Of blue wild violets in the grass!

Again I see her, laid at rest,
The violets nestling in her breast.
The waken fingers, white and cold,
Still clasp them in their patient hold,
But know not now, alas, alas!
The touch of violets from the grass!

Soft cradled on a sunny slope,
Watched by twin angels, Faith and Hope,
My pretty baby sleeping lies;
And as it were her own sweet eyes
Smile up to greet me as I pass
The blue wild violets in the grass.

—Katharine Festetics in Youth's Companion.

THE ELLA NOBLE.

"I was only 19 years old when I shipped the first time," said my friend, the old sailor. "The craft was a brig called the Swallow, and she was bound for the west coast of Africa, having a cargo of cotton cloth, boots and shoes, rum in casks, needles, brass kettles, cutlasses, old muskets and other stuff that could be readily traded for gold dust, nuggets and ivory with the natives. In those days, more than 40 years ago, fortunes were made in this trade, but times have changed since then.

"We had another object besides trading, for we were instructed to look after the schooner Ella Noble, which had sailed for the very locality to which we were bound and had never returned. What had become of her was a mystery, for although she was spoken within a day's sail of the African coast no further tidings had come from her, and it was feared she had met with some fatal disaster.

"The crew were mostly made up of the roughest men found in shipping offices and along the water front, for the voyage was not a desirable one, as there was sure to be no little risk of life and the food could not be the best procurable by any means. I was not at all favorably impressed by my messmates, but my head was full of foolish notions about the romance in a cruise to Africa, and I was more than eager to go. Some of the romance faded when I was put on salt rations and compelled to do the duty of a common before-the-mast sailor.

"The captain was a brutal fellow, as he needed to be in order to command such a crew and keep them in subjection. He had a voice like a foghorn and a scowl that was black as a thundercloud. The first mate was a Spaniard named Corello. He had a fiery temper and a heavy hand, but I fancied him more than the skipper.

"For some reason Corello seemed to take a liking to me, and I afterward had cause to thank my good fortune this was true. He was not nearly so hard on me as he might have been, although I felt that my lot was quite hard enough.

"It was not long after leaving port that I observed queer actions among the sailors. There was a great deal of muttering, and sometimes I would espouse some of the men with their heads together talking in low tones. I did not like this, and so I told the mate about it. He looked at me queerly, saying guardedly: 'Have care. These men no like a tattler. If they hear you tell things, some time you get'—He finished by drawing his finger across his throat in a significant manner.

"From that time I felt sure there was trouble brewing, but I remembered the warning and was careful to keep my mouth shut. My dislike for the captain increased, and I actually grew to detest the man after I saw him knock down with a marline spike a sick man whom he had ordered aloft, but who was unable to mount the ratlines.

"During the first part of the voyage the captain and Corello got along well enough, and we had sighted the African coast when they had their first quarrel. The skipper attempted to bully the Spaniard, as was his custom with the regular men, and Corello flared up in an instant. Hot words followed. All at once the mate grabbed up a light running block and flung it at the mate's head.

"The aim was true enough, but Corello dodged. Then the skipper caught up a belaying pin and started for the Spaniard. I saw a flash of steel, and Corello fell back against the main hatchway, a knife in his hand. With a Spanish oath he swore he would cut the captain's heart out if an attempt was made to strike him with the belaying pin.

"For a little time the two men looked straight into each other's eyes, and then the captain's hand fell. I expected he would order that Corello be seized and put in irons, but he did nothing of the kind. Instead he retired to his cabin, and I saw a singular smile playing about the mate's mouth, while I fancied there was a burning power in his black eyes.

"That night Corello came to me as I stood my watch. He touched me lightly on the arm, whispering: 'I save you. Don't you be scared when the time come.' Then he was gone.

"I felt that a mutiny was threatened, and I was in doubt about what to do. I did not join the mutineers, and I had about determined to report my suspicions to the captain when I was relieved from the watch. As I was going forward I saw two forms and heard the voice of Corello saying: 'Not this night. Tomorrow.'

"This relieved my feelings somewhat, and I dared not attempt to arouse the skipper then, as I knew he would make a terrible racket about it, so I went to my bunk. I didn't sleep much, but the night passed without further incident.

"Morning found us becalmed at the mouth of a large river. The sun came up red and scorching, making the water shimmer like burnished silver. Not a breath of air rippled the surface of the sea or rattled the canvas we spread. By 9 o'clock a sort of bluish haze crept over the sky, but the heat was none the less oppressive.

"The captain walked the deck and raved. 'Do you know where we are?' he snarled at Corello. 'The natives who inhabit this country are cannibals! What if they should take a fancy to attack us now? We'd all be served in soup and roasts.'

"The skipper seemed to blame the mate, and in less than three minutes another row had begun. This time the mate did order Corello to be seized and ironed, but the order was not obeyed. Not a man moved to carry out the command. Instead the sailors stood scowling at their captain.

"What's this?" he roared, his face growing black. 'Do you refuse to obey me? By—! this is mutiny!'

"We are sick of you," calmly said Corello. 'We serve you so far as crew of the Ella Noble was serve. Grab him, lads!'

"The skipper snatched out a pistol and retreated a few steps, swearing to blow out the brains of the first man who tried to touch him. I saw a Portuguese creeping catlike up behind the man, and I knew the brig would soon be in the possession of the mutineers unless some unforeseen occurrence prevented.

"At this very instant Bidda Downes, a cockeyed old tar, shouted: 'Canoes puttin' off from shore loaded with blackskins! There's piles of 'em, an they're all armed. We're in for a fight!'

"In one instant the mutiny was over. Every man realized our peril, and they jumped to the rail to get a look at the approaching canoes. Downes had told the truth. A regular war party of the cannibals were coming off to attack the brig.

"Muskets and cutlasses, men!" thundered the captain. 'Train the gun on 'em and blow 'em out of the water!'

"Our only chance was to fight, and that chance was really a slim one, as we were badly prepared for such an encounter. Our heavy gun was a rusty old thing, and it was doubtful if it would do much execution. But we were not destined to fire a shot.

"Suddenly a great cry went up from the throats of the natives, and the canoes sat motionless on the glassy water, while the black faces of their inmates were turned upward.

"Great God! Look there!"

"The sailor who uttered the cry pointed almost directly overhead, and there we saw a most astounding spectacle. A two-masted schooner turned bottom upward seemed to hang suspended in the air amid the bluish haze that overspread the sky. Every sail was set, but they hung idle like our own, as if she was also becalmed. We could look directly upon the deck, but not a living thing seemed stirring about her. She was deserted.

"But the most singular part of it all is that I could read her name, and I swear she was the lost schooner Ella Noble.

"In a few moments she began to fade from view. Dimmer and dimmer grew her outlines, and she was finally swallowed up and lost in the haze. When we looked at the cannibals, every canoe was scooting for the shore as fast as paddles could send them. Those natives were the worst scared lot you ever saw, and we had no more trouble with them.

"I suppose it is easy enough to account for the vision of the vessel in the sky by calling it a mirage, but sailors are mighty superstitious, and there were some sober men on the Swallow after that. No further offer at mutiny was made, and everything moved smoothly to the end of the voyage.

"But we didn't find the Ella Noble, and she has never been heard of since.—New York Dispatch.

A Detail in a Government Office.

It is the popular impression that the smaller affairs of government are very loosely run and that in any of the departments are opportunities for fat pickings by any man not over scrupulous. As evidence of the incorrectness of this theory one of the treasury department employees relates an incident of the first day of Mr. Carlisle's administration. Secretary Foster had occupied one chair at his desk for a long time, and, as men will, had become attached to it. He expressed a desire to take it with him. "Certainly," said his successor, "take it along." It was more easily said than done. First an order was necessary; then the chair was to be accounted for to the official who has such matters in charge; then it was to be paid for. It was a valueless piece of furniture. As a short way out of the difficulty the appraiser was sent for. He eyed the wreck over and said it might be worth $2 to anybody who wanted it very much.

"All right," said the new secretary. Then he put his hand in his pocket, pulled out a $2 bill, paid the official and presented the chair to his predecessor.—Washington Post.

An Old English Law.

The archives of the port of Southampton, England, contain a curious naval law of the fourteenth century. The document holds the captain of a vessel responsible for the value of the goods lost if his vessel is wrecked on any voyage begun in spite of the opinion of a majority of the crew that the wind was unfavorable.—Kate Field's Washington.

WEALTHY CHILDREN.

HOW THE BOYS AND GIRLS OF THE RICH ARE BROUGHT UP.

Young People Who Travel All Over the World Without Interruption to Their Studies—Plain Food and Few Sweetmeats For Most of Them.

There are in the United States about 100 children who, upon arriving at the age of maturity, will come into the possession of very large fortunes. They will each have many millions of dollars. In fact one-sixth of the wealth of the United States is supposed to be in the hands of 30 millionaire families, and each child of each family will some day own the millions that have been accumulated for it by its parents and grandparents.

The parents of the children who will some day own one-sixth of all the wealth in this country are very careful about the training and the education of these fortunate youngsters. They are bringing them up as carefully as ever the children of the royal families of England and Germany were brought up. Their teachers are selected from the best in the world, and they are taught, disciplined and drilled in a wonderful way—a way that many children would consider very hard, strict and tiresome.

These millionaire children must be well trained, because they will control many of the railroads of America, telegraph companies, and gold, silver and oil mines, besides iron interests and other great industries.

As a rule they travel a great deal, and some of them have been over our whole country.

Take the Vanderbilt children for example. They are constantly on the go. In the summer they are at Newport. Later they visit Lenox. Then they go to Europe in a private steam yacht and return just in time to spend Christmas at home. From February until June they travel through the west in a private car.

But during all these trips their studies are uninterrupted. A corps of teachers, governess and private tutors accompany them everywhere. Their studies are no more disturbed by a departure for Mexico than a public school child's studies are disturbed by a half-term.

Some time ago Mr. Seward Webb and his wife and children journeyed to the World's fair in a special train. They stopped to visit Mexico, Texas and California first. During all this long trip the Webb children and some little cousins who accompanied them went on with their studies as usual. There was a special car just for that purpose. The car was called the "Idler," and it was gorgeously hung with blue tapestries and fine pictures. It had a blue carpet and blue chairs, and all its furnishings suggested a daintily appointed schoolroom rather than a railroad car.

While on such trips the children are taught geography from observation, and it is easy to see that they get a fine knowledge of the country which they will some day control to a great extent.

When the W. K. Vanderbilt children are at home they are taught in a schoolroom which is beautifully decorated with Mother Goose melodies and nursery rhymes. There are also simple quotations from Shakespeare for the older children. Nothing is spared to make the book education complete.

In their daily lives, their goings and their comings and their play, nearly all of the little American aristocrats are brought up alike. And that is with extreme simplicity. They dress with one-half the elegance of other children, and they eat plainer food. Such children as these wear no jewelry at all. They do not know what it is to have gold rings, bangle bracelets and necklaces. Nor do they carry watches.

Mrs. Paron Stevens, who is a very rich woman, says that her daughter, who is now the wealthy Mrs. Arthur Paget of London and New York, went wild with delight over a simple little ring given to her when she was 18. It was her very first bit of jewelry.

Mrs. Whitney, the wife of ex-Secretary Whitney, used to make it a point to take her lunch at the children's dinner hour, and it was then that she took occasion to teach her little ones by precept and example the little elegances of manner which mark the well bred person. Mrs. Flagler, the wife of the rich Standard Oil man, goes farther and often lunches with her children in their schoolroom and devotes many hours to personal instructions.

But of course the daily life of rich children is not all discipline. Though they do not have candy and jewelry and rich clothes and rich food, they have luxuries which other children do not have. They own beautiful horses and fine dogs, all of the best breeds. A millionaire boy has his saddle horse and often his tandem team when at his country home, and some of these boys have a four in hand. When one of these boys wants a new horse, he buys one or selects one from his father's stables. He has a kennel of dogs, besides rare birds and other pets. And if he wants to own a collection of stamps or stones or butterflies or any other one thing, his father gives him money to buy the best that can be bought.

When young William Astor Chanler, who is now exploring the heart of Africa, was spending his summers at Lake George not many years ago, he was seized with a fancy for owning boats of all kinds. He wanted canoes, duck-boats, yachts and launches.

And he got them all. But the children of the neighborhood used to say that "poor Willie Chanler" was never allowed to buy soda water or candy. One day the temptation to buy candy became too strong for the boy millionaire, and he marched boldly into a candy store with a company of Lake George boys at his heels.

"Give me 25 cents' worth of candy," said he, "and charge it to William A."—New York Press.

Assertion unsupported by fact is nugatory. Surmise and general abuse, in however elegant language, ought not to pass for truth.—Junius.

Wall Street's Narrow Escape.

Wall street barely escaped something worse than Black Friday on July 18. It came pretty near to being a black Tuesday. Scores of men on and off the exchange will remember it as long as they live in the way that one remembers a great peril, and even the men who made hundreds of thousands through that day's awful drop in values will always look back upon it with a twinge of terror.

Some time, when these troublous times have passed and Wall street has a chance to pause for a bit of gossip again, a great story will be told about that Tuesday—a story that will astound everybody except a few of the country's greatest speculators, and a story that will make many people in this and other cities turn pale and catch their breaths.

They will show then how frightfully narrow was the escape from a financial catastrophe of crushing magnitude.

They will know that the fate of the street, and with it the fate of scores of tributaries to the street, legitimate and otherwise, of bankers, merchants and manufacturers, too numerous to stop to count, hung in the balance, and that a finger's touch from any one of three men would have turned the scale ruinward. And when they learn this they will probably come as near to really thanking God as their religion or lack of religion will let them, because instead of the one man's finger touch weighting the scale down with disaster there was a sturdy shoulder push from all three of that day's destinies of the street to force it up into safety.—New York Press.

A Murderer Pensioned.

Ambassador Bayard has been instructed to make inquiries in regard to whether Captain W. C. Minor is still alive, or whether the government is paying a salary to a dead officer. Captain Minor is a retired officer of the medical corps, his retirement being due to brain trouble consequent upon a sunstroke received in the line of duty in Florida in 1870, and he was sentenced for life in an English asylum for shooting a man on English soil 21 years ago. It is the only case on record of a murderer borne on the rolls of the army and drawing the regular pay of his grade. His pay is drawn by Richard E. Rice of New Haven, the appointed conservator, who files quarterly certificates bearing the signature of the superintendent of the Broadmore Criminal Lunatic asylum to the effect that Captain Minor is living. The last report from the superintendent read: "He was confined in the asylum April 17, 1873. His offense consisted of shooting with a revolver and killing a man in the Belvidere road, Lambeth." The relatives of Captain Minor have repeatedly made strenuous efforts through the state department to secure his release.—Albany Express.

A State Soda Fountain.

It may sound like a Munchausen yarn, but it is an actual fact that in the quaint little burg of Sodaville, in Linn county, in block 8 of the town plat, there is a soda spring, and that the last legislature, in its infinite wisdom, provided that "inasmuch as there is a great and growing demand on the part of the public for the waters of said spring," the state would spend $500 to improve it. This is at last the fond realization of the long felt want which has been loafing around the country like the ghost of boyhood's happy days in quest of a watermelon patch where haply lingered no vicious dog. It is a grand and imposing sight to see the legislative fancy rising from the sordid contemplation of a cold and unresponsive hog law and hovering on halcyon wings over the soft murmur of an idyllic state soda fountain.—Astoria (Or.) Budget.

A Fracas in the House.

There was a personal encounter on the floor of the house of representatives Feb. 15, 1798, between Roger Griswold of Connecticut and Matthew Lyon of Vermont, editor of The Scourge of Aristocracy and Repository of Important Political Truth and one of the few victims of the sedition law, under which he served a term in jail and paid a fine of $1,000.

An old time cut represents the two congressmen hammering each other with a cudgel and tongs. Under gross provocation Lyon had spit in Griswold's face, but at the time of the fracas the house had not been called to order, though prayer had been offered by the chaplain.—Buffalo Courier.

Miraculous Image at Milan.

Curious scenes of religious fanaticism, our Rome correspondent says, are taking place in the Milan cathedral. For several days an excited crowd has thronged around a marble Madonna, a rough work of the fourteenth century, which is said to have recently performed miracles by healing blind and lame people. The crush around the Madonna is so great that the police have had to interfere for fear of accidents happening.—London News.

The State of the Case.

It is New York news that the Duke of Veragua would accept "should American gratitude for the services of Christopher Columbus take the shape of a fund." In Chicago his grace's acceptance has not for a moment been doubted. It has only been a question of fund or no fund, with a preponderance of sentiment in the negative.—Chicago Journal.

A Way to Keep Butter Without Ice.

A suggestion to campers or other folk who are really roughing it is how to secure cool butter without ice. Fill a box with sand to within an inch or two of the top. Sink the butter jars in the sand; then thoroughly wet the sand with cold water. Cover the box as nearly airtight as possible.

Georgia's Fame and Fortune.

Georgia's melon crop this year is estimated to be worth nearly $250,000 to the farmers, and perhaps $100,000 to the railroads in the state. The state's crops will run up to 8,000 carloads, it is said, and at $60 a car the farmers will get almost $450,000.—Atlanta Constitution.

A Gentleman

Who formerly resided in Connecticut, but who now resides in Honolulu, writes: "For 20 years past, my wife and I have used Ayer's Hair Vigor, and we attribute to it the dark hair which she and I now have, while hundreds of our acquaintances, ten or a dozen years younger than we, are either gray-headed, white, or bald. When asked how our hair has retained its color and fullness, we reply, 'By the use of Ayer's Hair Vigor—nothing else.'" "In 1868, my affianced was newly married, and the hair kept falling out every day. I induced her to use Ayer's Hair Vigor, and very soon, it not only checked any further loss of hair, but produced an entirely new growth, which has remained luxuriant and glossy to this day. I can recommend this preparation to all in need of a genuine hair-restorer. It is all that it is claimed to be."—Antonio Alarum, Bastrop, Tex.

BOSTON AMUSEMENTS.

PARK THEATRE—Another week of fun, fast and furious, began with the 92d performance of "The Golden Wedding" at the Park Theatre, Monday evening. All the leading characters are taken by specialists in each line of merry-making and the mixture acts like a bracing tonic upon the spectators. The "Golden Wedding" will celebrate its hundredth anniversary at the Park with a souvenir night one week hence. Among the scenic splendors of Rice's fantastic production of "Yankee" at the Park Theatre, Sept. 11, will be two very elaborate symbolical act drops. Hugh L. Reid, Frank Rafter and John A. Thompson, well known artists of the Hollis Street Theatre, were among the competitors in submitting designs. Mr. Thompson proved the successful one, and has been awarded the contract.

BOWDOIN SQUARE THEATRE—The success of the season at the popular Bowdoin Square Theatre can best be judged from the fact that even standing room has been at a premium at nearly every performance thus far, and there is every indication that the brilliant record of this play house last season will be duplicated by that of the coming months. Next week, Manager Atkinson, whose good judgment has been so conclusively shown by these results, announces as his attraction Steele Mackaye's great romantic drama of "Paul Kauvar." Its scenes are those of Paris life during the revolution of '94, and its incidents are well calculated to maintain the interest of the audience throughout its action. "Paul Kauvar" will be followed by Wm. Barry in "The Rising Generation."

GRAND OPERA HOUSE.—An event in the theatrical season at Boston will be the coming out of the newly organized Grand Opera House Stock Company. The time is now brief for this to occur, as next Monday evening the organization will appear in an elaborate production of Augustin Daly's comedy of "Frou Frou." Great preparations have been made for the giving of this play and it promises to have the best cast ever seen in a presentation in the city. Principal among the several features which will characterize the production will be the first appearance of Miss Sadie Martinot a member of the Grand Opera House company. Miss Martinot will be seen in the principal role of the play, that of Gilberte. Miss Martinot has always been known to wear in every role which she has played beautiful and expensive gowns, and for "Frou Frou" she has had created some very charming costumes. The play will be handsomely mounted and new scenery has been painted especially for the production. "Frou Frou" is in five acts and is considered the best of Augustin Daly's many plays. The piece was given its first performance at the Fifth Avenue theatre, New York, in February, 1870.

TREMONT THEATRE—Next week the summer season at the Tremont Theatre will close after a highly successful series of operatic performances by the popular Pauline Hall opera company. For the tenth and last week of the engagement at Messrs. Abbey, Schmitt & Co.'s elegant house, Offenbach's bright opera comique, "Mme. Fivart," which for two weeks has drawn very large audiences, will constitute the attraction, and the indications are that Miss Hall's brilliant season will be brought to a close with the opera still in the full tide of success. The young artist, known as Edwina, "the sensation," who made such a great hit on Monday evening, will appear between the second and third acts of the opera. Her specialty is indescribable. She is a whole show in herself. Graceful, lithe and quick as a flash, a dancer, acrobat and actress combined. Hoyt's merry satire, "A Trip to Chinatown," which has broken all records in New York for long runs, will come to the Tremont Theatre for a brief season on Monday, Sept. 4. During the regular season at the Tremont the following attractions will be offered: Hoyt and Thomas' companies, E. S. Willard, Irving and Terry, Coquelin and Laiding, Mounet Sully, W. H. Crane, A. M. Palmer's company, the Bostonians, Cadet burlesque, Modjeska, Stuart Robson, and Russell's comedians.

STATE HIGHWAY COMMISSION.

THE MEMBERS TRAVELLING ON WHEELS.

Commissioners Perkins and McClintock of the state highway commission made a run of 135 miles in the last half of last week from Lawrence westward through the northern tier of towns. Starting at Lawrence Wednesday and returning to Boston Thursday night on account of rain, yet resuming the onward course on Friday, they accomplished this long run successfully and made many valuable observations. The towns they traversed were Dracut, Lowell, Tyngsboro, Dunstable, Pepperell, Townsend, Ashburnham, Ashby, Winchendon, Royalston, Warwick, Northfield, Gill, Montague, Erving, Orange and Athol. Their route was over what is as much as anything the main line of highway through this district, though the road in some places ran out to nothing but a mere track across the pastures, where nothing was done to keep it in good condition. Earlier in the month most of Cape Cod had been traversed in a similar way, and this week Friday the commissioners will go to Bourne and finish their survey of that region.

Next week it is their plan to travel through Berkshire county in the same way. They do their work at high speed. The beginning of this kind of observation was made by teams, but it was found to involve an expense, including the hired driver, of about $12 per day, which the commissioners thought was more than their legislative appropriation of $2000 per year for expenses would warrant. So they took to their wheels, and find that they can get over the ground faster than by team, for many stops are to be made, and at less expense. While they are actually travelling they go faster than the horses. After Berkshire county they propose to traverse the remainder of the state in the same way. Before long they will begin the annual series of meetings which the law requires them to hold in every county. They will begin at Nantucket, follow this by a meeting at Cotuit City, and then expect to begin at the west end of the state, leaving the counties nearer Boston for the latter part of the season. The nature of these county meetings will be different from the county meetings of last year. Then the commissioners had in mind to learn what the people of the county thought of establishing a state commission permanently. Now that the commission is established, it is the duty of its members to learn what is for the advantage of the people of any locality, and to give all needed advice. So, instead of asking questions of the people, the commissioners will answer questions, which may be asked of them. While on their trip of survey the commissioners keep notes showing every cross-road, stream and landmark, together with the quality and amount of good road-building materials which is in the vicinity. In the northern towns the commissioners did not stop to interview the people, as they did on the Cape, but pushed rapidly on with observations. In their journey of 135 miles they made an average of four miles an hour, including at their stops to investigate the nature of the road materials in many places. Cyclometers attached to their bicycles gave them the distance. Chairman Perkins of the commission says that there is already talk of making the main road from Springfield to Westfield a state highway, and in one of the Attleboro papers there is also a discussion of doing the same with the old Boston and Providence turnpike from Boston as far as the Rhode Island state line. Some of the old turnpike lines are the most travelled roads in the state today. It is said that there were about 1000 miles of turnpike in the state at one time, belonging to the 120 chartered companies which operated them under acts of the Legislature. These old lines will be laid off by the commissioners upon a map of the state, and this showing of the old turnpike system is expected to be of advantage in the development of a state system of highways.

Echo Bridge Park Extension.

The large tract of meadow land, which lies on either side of the old Turnpike, Worcester street, Wellesley, near the Charles River and Echo Bridge, has been bought by Mr. Edgar W. Foster, 53 State street, Boston, of the Newton Land Improvement Co. This land is intended for an extension of Echo Bridge Grove, which is situated at the Upper Falls, and goes by the name of "The Echo Bridge Grove Extension." The location of this land is most desirable for building purposes, it being within short walking distance from the Upper Falls, and it is made doubly attractive by the fact that it borders upon a sheet of the purest and cleanest water half a mile long, broad and deep. The "Extension" has been divided up into building lots, laid out upon a large number of well graded streets, such as Linden, Beacon, Church, Forest, etc. During the last year two or three hundred of these lots have been sold, a fact which plainly shows how much the advantages of the "Extension" are appreciated by the employees of the factories and paper mills of the Upper and Lower Falls. Some half dozen or more new houses are contracted for, and several cellars are fast nearing completion. The Selectmen and Com. Childs, having a full understanding of the value of this property, have ordered the construction of a new culvert under the Turnpike, on a lower level, which makes surface drainage of the "Extension" into the Charles River practical.

The American Social Science Association.

The education department of the American Social Science Association offers an unusually attractive program for its day at Saratoga, September 5. Mr. Hamilton W. Mabie, the well known litterateur and editor of the Outlook, will make the opening address. This will be followed by a paper on "The Seamy Side of the Kindergarten," by Edward Fisher, of Berkshire, Mass. "American Colleges and Their Work," is Dr. G. Stanley Hall's subject. Dr. Louise Fiske Bryson will read a paper on "The Education of Epileptics," and the Hon. Oscar Strauss will speak on "Turkey and Civilization." In the health department, September 6, Dr. Frederick Peterson will give an address on "Recent Progress in Medicine and Surgery." Dr. Mary T. Bissell has promised a paper on Athletics for City Girls." In the finance department President Andrews of Brown University will read a paper on "Silver in India."

Deafness Cannot be Cured

by local applications, as they cannot reach the diseased portion of the ear. There is only one way to cure Deafness, and that is by constitutional remedies. Deafness is caused by an inflamed condition of the mucous lining of the Eustachian Tube. When this tube gets inflamed you have a humming sound or imperfect hearing, and when it is entirely closed Deafness is the result, and unless the inflammation can be taken out and this tube restored to its normal condition, hearing will be destroyed forever; nine cases out of ten are caused by catarrh, which is nothing but an inflamed condition of the mucous surfaces.

We will give One Hundred Dollars for any case of Deafness (caused by catarrh) that cannot be cured by Hall's Catarrh Cure. Send for circulars, free.

—The wedding of Miss Grace M. Brackett, daughter of Mrs. John M. Brackett of Brookline, and Mr. Robert E. Lewis of St. Johnsbury, Vt., took place yesterday afternoon. It was a very pretty home affair, occurring at the residence of the bride's sister, Mrs. Charles H. Dole, Marshall street, and only a few intimate friends and relatives were present to witness the tying of the nuptial knot and join their congratulations to the sweet faced bride and her husband. After a short and informal reception Mr. and Mrs. Lewis departed on a wedding trip, and on their return will reside at St. Johnsbury, Vt. The ceremony was performed by the Rev. Arthur J. Hovey of Taunton, uncle of the bride. There were a large number of elegant presents.

—At the annual meeting of the St. Andrews Land Company of New Brunswick, Mr. A. D. S. Bell was elected secretary and treasurer, Mr. Robert S. Gardiner, vice-president, and Mr. D. B. Claffin one of the directors. The same gentlemen were elected to similar offices of the Chamcook Water Company, and Mr. Gardiner and Mr. Claffin directors of the Algonquin Hotel Company. Mr. Gardiner has erected an attractive new summer residence at St. Andrews, and the reports of the companies were said to be very satisfactory.

—The new brick block progresses slowly, but with a steadiness that assures one of the thoroughness of the work done. There is no contract work about the construction of the building, all the workmen being hired by the day and the whole force directly being under Mr. Gray's supervision. One can judge something of the thoroughness of the foundation work from the fact that the first spadeful of earth was thrown out about the first of April, and although workmen have been busy ever since, the street floor is but just being laid and the first story walls to rise. It is stated that the foundation work is sufficiently strong to support an eight story brick building in the city has, and one that some day may be of advantage to Newton Centre. The Pompeian brick which are being used for the face of the building with trimmings of granite, will add much to its attractiveness and afford a very pleasing relief from the conventional red brick building.
